

return to updates

HARRY STYLES

by Miles Mathis

I know that some of my readers wish I would write only about the most important topics, but a little bird told me today to write this short exposé of Styles. Something told me it would be fantastically easy, and it was.

I guess you can see why he bugged me. He is on the cover of Rolling Stone or some such mag this month. I saw him in line at market. It wasn't the pic above, but one equally revolting. I thought to myself, "There he is, undersized [5'11" my ass] gay rich boy of the week, looking as punchable as humanly possible." Every few days they have another one of these little twits to force down our throats as fascinating. I didn't have a clue who he was, so I looked him up. He is a singer, apparently, from the band One Dimensional or something. Wikipedia tells he comes from a line of farm laborers in Norfolk. Yeah, right. I bet myself a million dollars he was from the peerage and huge wealth, and now I have to find some way to write myself a check.

In the encyclopedia entries, we are told Harry's father Desmond is in finance, but nothing more. With a little more research, we find he was Operations Manager of HFC Bank for 16 years. What is that? It is a large bank in Ghana, Africa. If we search on that, we find it admitted at Wikipedia that HFC is a shell bank for Universal Merchant Bank, Ghana. But since much of the stock in HFC is owned by Union Bank of Nigeria, we have a series of shunts and fronts here. Union Bank was formerly Barclays Bank, so you begin to see the lay of the land. Desmond Styles is already looking like a pretty shady character.

We then learn Desmond worked for Quickdox Limited. What is that? Hard to tell. On its website, it says it is "the UK's leading field agent and document collecting company". What? Is that supposed to mean something? Field agent. I looked that up, and of course the only thing that came up was a spy that worked in the field. The entire website looks like a front for Intel, or a shell for something else.

Desmond Styles now runs his own consulting company. A freelance agent, eh?

Clearly, we weren't going to be told anything sensible about this Desmond Styles, so I went directly to thepeerage.com, to research the Styles and Selley families. Of course the Styles were Baronets. This was more than 100 years ago, but they were related to everyone. The sister of the 4th Baronet, Mary Styles, married Philip Egerton, and their children include Sir John Grey-Egerton, 8th Baronet; Sir Philip Grey-Egerton, 9th Baronet; General Sir Charles Bulkeley Egerton; and Rowland Egerton-Warburton. Notice the name Grey, which links them to the Greys of Northumberland we have seen over and over. We will see them again below. General Egerton was a Knight Grand Cross, Order of St. Michael and St. George. He was also a Knight Commander, Hanoverian Order. He married a Troubridge, linking him to those Baronets. His daughter married a Pitt. Rowland Egerton married Emma Croxton, whose mother was Emma Warburton. This name was so important, Rowland took the name of his mother-in-law. These Warburtons were also Baronets, from Chester and Cheshire. You will remember that location from my papers on the Stanley Earls, from the same place. We are about to see them again, too. Harry Styles' family is still from Cheshire.

There is not much information on these Warburtons, but I suspect they are related to the Warburgs of Germany, famous Jewish bankers. They later joined the Schiffs. They admit the Warburgs took the name from the city they were living in at the time, but they don't tell us what the name was before Warburg. We are told they descended from Simon von Cassel, but again, that just means "from Cassel". The Warburtons are equally mysterious, with the earliest mentioned at Wikipedia being a Dean of Wells in 1631. But Geni.com takes them further back. There we find them as Knights of Chester, related to Booths, Houghtons, Middletons, Brereton (Lord Chief Justice of Ireland), Duttons, and Grosvenors; until we come to a Sir John Warburton of about 1500, who married Jane Stanley. She was the daughter of Sir William Stanley, and we have seen him before. He was the brother of Thomas Stanley, 1st Earl of Derby, and titular King of Mann. He put the Tudors on the throne. William was allegedly beheaded, but that was just an early fake.

The Grosvenors are important as well, since the Grey-Egerton Baronets eventually became the Barons and then Earls of Wilton (around 1800). When Lord Wilton died in 1814, the Earldom passed to his grandson, Thomas Grosvenor. And these Egertons had also descended from Stanley lines (a second time), since a Sir John Egerton had married Margaret Stanley in about 1580. She was the daughter of Sir Rowland Stanley of Hooton. They were later also Baronets (1661). The 11th Baronet, Rowland Stanley, changed his name to Errington and moved to that estate in Northumberland. Notice how Northumberland keeps coming up, too: the Greys were from there. The Errington estate in Northumberland was Sandhoe Hall, just a stone's throw from other noble residences we looked at in my paper on Daisy Ridley, including Blagdon Hall, home of Viscount Ridley, Baron Wensleydale; and Howick Hall, of the Greys and later Barings.

But let's go back to the Styles in the peerage. There are much more recent examples, including Jessie Styles, daughter of George Gaviller Styles of Knockhall, Kent. She married Frederick Murray-Gourlay, 25th Baron of Kincaig, in 1893. She died in 1955. Her son and grandson were also Barons. Then we have David Philip Dowling Styles, whose dates and parentage are curiously scrubbed. But we can tell from the name Dowling he was related to that family, which is also related to the Stuarts/Stewarts (and all the rest—including Hitler). He married Patricia Moore, daughter of Commander Oliver Russell Moore. This links the Styles to the Moores, Carters and Russells. Curiously, Oliver's mother is not given, but she would be the Russell. His father is given as Arthur Montague Moore, which of course links them to the Montagues as well—another very old family of the peerage, later related to George Washington. These Moores were also related to the Achesons, Earls of Gosford. See for example Archibald Montagu Acheson, 5th Earl, died 1954. He married Louisa Montagu, daughter of the Duke of Manchester.

And, yes, Truman's Secretary of State Dean Acheson was related to these folks, since his father was born in England. They try to hide this by scrubbing Dean Acheson's genealogy, with no grandparents given. But Acheson's mother is also a clue, since she was a Gooderham, related to the Worts. Worts is a variation of Wertz, which is Jewish. Gooderham and Worts were distillers and bankers. Their company Gooderham and Worts was once the largest distiller in Canada. And do you want to guess who Dean Acheson's wife was? . . .

If you guessed a Stanley, you win today's top prize. She was Alice Caroline Stanley. For today's second prize, guess who her daughter married . . .

A Bundy. William Bundy, brother of McGeorge Bundy, both CIA founders.

The 6th Earl of Gosford was Archibald Stanley Acheson, so we can see that Dean Acheson actually married a cousin. Alice Stanley was descended from the Stanleys of Hartford, and they descend from Stanleys of Kent. And where were the Styles from at that time? Kent.

The Styles in the peerage are also related to the Townshends. Think Pete Townshend of The Who, another promoted English pop musician. We even find a John Townshend in this search married to an Elizabeth Montgomery. Oh no! My favorite witch, too? Arrow through the heart.

Harry Styles' mother is supposed to be a Selley, but I find that doubtful. Her mother is given as Mary Selley. Hmm. Not Mary Shelley? Given what we have found about Harry's father, I would guess Selley should either be Sellers or Shelley or Zelly. To find out which, we search on Selley and Zelly, finding the Zelleys were from Lancashire and Cheshire but not the Selleys. This would indicate Styles' mother may be related to the Zelly jewelers north of London. A further search tells us both Zelly and Selley are variations of Sealy/Sealey. And if we go to that name at thepeerage.com, we find confirmation. The one Sealy in the peerage is related to a Carter, which we saw above linked to the Styles. So, again, we see cousins marrying with Styles and Selley: very common in the peerage. Same with the several Sealeys in the peerage, where we find Eileen Egerton Harrison marrying Lt. Col. Sealy in about 1930. We saw many Egertons above. We also find a Charles Sealy in the East India Company.

Is the name Sellers also included in this bunch? A search finds that they may be. Marilyn Sellers married Stephen Murray in 1979. We saw the Murrays above, Barons of Kincaid. Stephen Murray's father Alexander married a June Rabinovitch, obviously Jewish. Alexander's grandmother was Jane Otway Ford. These Murrays were and are the Earls of Dunmore.

Actor Peter Sellers' second wife Miranda Quarry was the granddaughter of Beatrice Webb. Besides being married to a Quarry, this Webb also married a William Walter Myers. That name is Jewish, and we have seen before that the Webbs are crypto-Jewish. These Webbs are related to the current Queen through a Frances Webb, as I show here. Miranda Quarry's mother married the 2nd Baron Mancroft, Stormont Mancroft Samuel. He changed his name, dropping the Samuel, indicating he was also Jewish. This is confirmed at Wikipedia, where we are told his grandmother was a Haldinstein and that they were all Ashkenazi Jews. Stormont was a Lt. Colonel and then became minister without portfolio under Harold Macmillan. His daughter married Prince Frederick of Prussia, which means the Prince was the step-brother of Miranda Quarry. It also means the Prince of Prussia married a Jewish girl. You will say, “big deal”, but it is admitted to be a big deal. On his page, they don't admit that directly, but infer it by telling you the marriage was “non-dynastic”. This means it was against house rules, and the Prince's children would not inherit any royal privileges, including succession.

Miranda Quarry later married the Earl of Stockton, becoming a Countess. That Earl was a Macmillan, like the Prime Minister that appointed Stormont Mancroft. So how did Peter Sellers get involved in all that? Was he also of the peerage? Well, he was a Commander, Order of the British Empire, which is a strange title to give an actor. The first thing we learn is that Sellers' mother was a Marks. Would it help if I spelled that Marx? She was the daughter of Solomon Marks, and all the names in the genealogy are Jewish at this point. Explaining Peter Sellers' looks, I suppose, as well as his connections. His grandfather was Israel Mordecai. An older ancestor was Halevi Marks, just to put to rest any doubt. The Sellers line is actually better scrubbed than the Marx line, which is strange. You would expect the opposite. We do learn that Peter was a Taylor on his father's side, probably linking him to Elizabeth Taylor. Peter's great-grandmother was a Taylor. However, we can easily skirt the scrubbing, since several other Peter Sellers are listed with genealogies. The first is from Weinheim, Baden, Germany, and he died in 1820. We find he was actually a Soller. We find a second Peter Sellers, d. 1820, from Bucks County, PA. He also appears to be Jewish, with many Jewish given names in his family. His father is Samuel and his mother is a Bader. If we go back, we find he is also a Soller. So if Sellers/Soller is a variation of Selley, then we can also link Selley to Zoeller. As in the golfer Fuzzy Zoeller, and so on.

At any rate, it looks like Peter Sellers was already of the peerage both through the Sealy and Taylor names, so making him a knight may have been a step down—as we saw recently with Mick Jagger as well.

What about the name Shelley? Does that fit in here, too? Hard to tell, but the Shelleys have their own mysteries. If we start with the famous poet Percy Shelley, b. 1792, we find his mother's side soon scrubbed. Percy's uncle married Henrietta Hunloke, and her sister married a Keppel. Keppel is a Jewish name, and Hunloke may be as well. Despite that, Henry Hunloke their father was the 4th Baronet Wingerworth. A more recent Lt. Col. Henry Hunloke, d. 1978, MP, was descended on his mother's side from King William IV (House of Hanover). This Hunloke did pretty well for himself, marrying Anne Cavendish, daughter of the Duke of Devonshire. As we find, this Hunloke was descended from Philip Charles Sidney, 1st Baron de L'Isle, who was married to Sophia FitzClarence. She was the (illegitimate) daughter of William IV, who had been the Duke of Clarence before becoming King. Sidney was half-brother of Shelley, so these are the same Hunlokes.

Anyway, back to Percy Shelley. His paternal line is also fudged. His father's mother is given as Mary Michell, daughter of Rev. Theobald Michell (Tredcroft) and Mary Tredcroft (Michell). What? Mary Tredcrofts' parents aren't given, so we get no clarification on that. His grandfather's mother is also fudged, with a maiden name possibly Plume. It is a huge red flag that all the women are fudged on both sides of his ancestry. Percy's grandfather Bysshe Shelley is said to be from Essex, New Jersey, which is odd. Also odd to find these pages managed by Michael Rhodes. Bysshe's grandmother is again fudged, possibly being a Parr. That would be clue, since it would link them to Catherine Parr, wife of Henry VIII. Another three steps back and we have more Michells, and they lead straight to a Middleton. At this point Erica “the Disconnectrix” Howton takes over as page manager and flushes everything straight down the toilet. So we return to the Shelley line, where we hit a Cromer and then a Fiennes. The Cromer is in the late 1500s, so it is probably a slur of Cromwell. Fiennes we have also seen before. Think actors Ralph and Joseph Fiennes, etc. This Anne Fiennes was the wife of Gregory Fiennes, 10th Baron Dacre. These Fiennes are related to the Nevilles (Earls of Westmoreland), Staffords (Dukes of Buckingham), Greys (Earls of Kent), Herberts (Earls of Pembroke), and Percys (Earls of Northumberland), so we have just zipped straight to the top, with all the usual suspects in the peerage. This Anne Fiennes, also wife of Henry Shelley, was the daughter of Richard Sackville, which also linked them to the Boleyns, Brydges, Thatchers and Devereux. Here we discover Brydges was originally Brugge, which links them to Belgium. Brugge or Bruges means Bridges in Dutch or Flemish. Before that the Shelleys are related to the Belknaps and Knollys. We have seen the Knollys in previous papers, linked to the crypto-Jewish Riches.

So although the Shelleys seem to predate the Selleys/Sellers, and are not equivalent, they do seem to come from the same crypto-Jewish lines. The fact that the Shelleys, like the Selleys/Sellers, are related to the Greys indicates to me that they all probably come from the same ancestor—an ancestor very likely not English.

What does this all mean for Harry Styles? It means that his mother's side is far harder to pin down. It is far harder to figure out exactly who she is than his father. But however you slice it, it looks like Styles is from the usual crypto-Jewish lines of the peerage and from great wealth—including banking wealth. Although he has a pretty face and nice hair, it is doubtful that alone won him the attention he is now getting. Like the rest of the famous people being promoted with such abandon, he was born to it. They are all sons of daughters of the highest elite—which would explain why so little merit is involved. Once the hair goes, it is all downhill. And since these poor bastards don't know how to take care of themselves, the looks don't last long. We will see if Harry has to fake his death at 26, or if he can hold out until he is 40-ish. Place your bets now.

As you can see, this was about more important things than Harry Styles, and I could see that going in. The Muses told me to look more closely, not so much to out Styles as to further uncover these old families in the peerage. Bigger fish were fried here than little ole Harry. If you don't follow me, I will just tell you that the important things to come away with here are the Stanleys and Greys and surrounding characters. In about two dozen papers now I have traced famous people—both from the US and UK—back to these central families in Chester and Northumberland. It looks to me like the Jewish invasion of England came first through Anglesey and Mann, proceeding from there to Liverpool and Northumberland. It has since engulfed the entire island, from which it proceeded to engulf the US and the rest of the world. The Stanleys would appear to be the central family, with the Greys being prominent early accomplices. Later the Spencer-Churchills took over a leading role, but they may just be the Stanleys under another name. I am slowly unwinding this, and will continue to do so.

Some have asked for a genealogical chart of these families, but I don't know enough to compile that yet. Besides, I normally leave those things to others. I do the primary research and let others collate it. I have been through the same thing on my science site, where many readers want me to stop and tidy everything up for them, putting everything in nice piles and creating indices and so on. But I don't see that as my job. That is a job for editors and historians and archivists. I have new things to discover and can't spend all my time spit-shining what I already know.