

Amanda Knox

by Miles Mathis

August 23, 2025

A reader mentioned this one today, and after looking at the Wiki page for about two minutes I told him it was probably faked as cover for the “dead” girl Meredith Kercher to go undercover in MI6. I ran that theory by a buddy and he bet me I couldn't solve it in one day. I took that bet and won it, as you are about to see.

It didn't take me a day, it took about twenty minutes, just from reading the Wiki pages closely for Knox and Kercher. I will hold the linchpin clue to make a good story out of it, but that is all I really needed. I spotted that clue on Kercher's page on a first reading. A clue everyone else has missed for 18 years.

We will start by going down Knox's page. Amanda Knox is a Jewish name and she looks Jewish. Pretty Jewish, like Natalie Portman (though not that pretty), but still. Consult my paper on John Knox. She was obviously chosen for her looks to draw attention away from Kercher, which was the whole point. That and as eyes-off from real news and the real world. And as part of Women-are-Pigs, Split-the-Sexes. A sub-field of Operation Chaos.

Kercher is of course another Jewish name, a variant of Kirschner, etc. Meredith's father John just happened to be a professional journalist and writer, publishing “several thousand articles for the British and overseas newspaper and magazine market”. He also edited several magazines and wrote several books, including the film biography of Warren Beatty. So he was capable of writing a lot of the copy for this extended event, and we know he did write articles on it for the Daily Mail. Convenient, to say the least.

Amanda's father is given as Curt Knox, VP of Finance at Macy's, but that was from 2008 so his position is probably even higher now. So a very rich girl with huge connections. She later married a Sutherland,* as in Scottish peers closely related to the Stuarts. And related to the Knoxes, so she probably married a cousin. These people usually do. Her mother is given as Edda Mellas, but Mellas is her second married name, and Edda is probably an abbreviation of something longer. So lots of misdirection going on there. What is her maiden name? She is German, so let us guess. Cohen? Hiller? Eichmann? Marx? No information was forthcoming on a quick search. Later: Instantcheckmate has never heard of her under that name nationwide. Radaris lists her as a Huff, which is a variant of Hoffman, which would have been in my top 20 guesses. That name is confirmed at WestsideSeattle, where we find Amanda's grandmother was Elizabeth Huff. Her grandfather was Harley Huff, army. Edda is also related to Kaufmans. According to Radaris, she is related to Spencer Mellas, 55, aka Thomas Mellas Spencer. So Edda may have married a Spencer, or into the Spencers, which fits like a glove here. Taking that back to Instantcheckmate, we find the computer there has still never heard of an Edda Huff of Seattle. So she has been scrubbed. So has Harley Huff. He has a listing but no locations or relatives. Radaris says he was really Michael Huff.

We find more clues in that WestsideSeattle story. They call grandmother Oma, like Germans or German Jews would, and After the call she said, “I told Amanda to keep her chin up. I like to give her a little ‘oomph.’ She told me about a book she found in the prison library that interested her by Heinrich Heine.” Heine was a German Jew born on 1797 and well known for his romantic poetry.

Dropping clues down your throat as usual, knowing you won't be able to swallow them.

The alleged murder was November 1, 2007. All Saints Day, the day after Halloween. 11/1/2007, giving us lots of ones to go with eights to get the required aces and eights, sign of a fake.

Knox's first meeting with her legal counsel was on November 11.[66]

Also note the footnote number there, which is not a coincidence. Knox was arrested and charged with murder just four days after the event, which makes absolutely no sense. Investigations simply do not move that fast unless they are scripted beforehand to do so.

The prosecutor of Knox in the case was Italian superspook Giuliano Mignini, a sort of Italian Vincent Bugliosi. In the book Trial by Fury, author Douglas Preston has all but proved Mignini was planted by Italian intelligence to manufacture another fake Satanic Sex Cult story here, circling us back to the last two papers I published by Donny Ahzmond on this subject of the Satanic Panic. To be clear, Preston had no intention of doing that, just the opposite in fact—attacking independent “bloggers” like me, but that is what your takeaway should be of the evidence he presents. Minus his spin, we see that Mignini was allowed to do in this fake Italian court many of the things Bugliosi was allowed to do in the Manson fake, spinning fantastic tales that any real judge would have shut down immediately. For instance, Mignini made up this quote of something Knox might have said to Kercher:

You acted the goody-goody so much, now we are going to show you. Now you're going to be forced to have sex!

You may think prosecutors are allowed to freely theorize to juries like that in Italy, but they aren't. Italy has pretty much the same rules of trial as we do in that regard, and that would be struck down immediately by any judge as wild speculation. The fact that it wasn't indicates that once again we are looking at a fake CIA-type trial. Confirmation of that is the worldwide media coverage it got. It wasn't televised live, but cameras were allowed in the courtroom, as you may remember.

I have told you that all these televised trials are faked, run by the Intel agencies to play their games. If Kercher was going into CIA or MI6, we have the obvious primary cause of these fake trials.

Mignini was also involved in promoting the story of the Satanic serial killer the Monster of Florence, so we may assume that was also a huge fake, of the Zodiac sort. Grist for another paper.

Next we find that Knox was convicted not once but twice. She was convicted, the conviction was overturned and sent back, she was convicted again and it was again overturned, this time for good. In the meantime the event had been clogging up the worldwide press for eight years, keeping your eyes off real news. Real trials don't work like that, not in Italy or anywhere else.

On January 24, 2019, the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR) ordered Italy to pay compensation to Knox for violating her rights in the hours after her arrest in Perugia. Italy was ordered to pay Knox €18,400 (about US$20,800) for not providing her with either a lawyer or a competent interpreter when she was first held in custody.[\[145\]](#)[\[146\]](#)

What? $20,000 for not providing her with a lawyer or interpreter? What about for four years of false prosecution and imprisonment? Her rich Daddy couldn't afford a lawyer to sue Perugia for millions for false imprisonment after the court ruled the whole thing was "without foundation"? Plus, the penalty for not providing her with a lawyer is not $20,000 in cash, it is throwing the whole thing out of court on the first day. The very first judge should have spotted that on day one and thrown everyone out on their asses for major civil rights violations. He should have brought Mignini and everyone else up on charges of railroading. . . except that of course this wasn't a real trial and CIA outranks fake Italian judges.

Here are some others signs of a fake trial:

Kercher's DNA was miraculously not on the murder weapon. Since that weapon was a knife she was stabbed with, that makes no sense. If her DNA was not on the murder weapon, how did they know it was the murder weapon? You will say it had her blood on it. Yes, but blood would contain her DNA.

So we are being told it didn't have her blood on it.

Knox was interrogated for four days with no lawyer present and denied food, water, and sleep, meaning that, according to this story, she was tortured and denied her basic rights. Any prosecution should have been forfeit based on that alone. Plus, Knox was just 20 at the time of the event, meaning she was not a legal adult in Italy, where the age of majority is 21. In fact, she had just turned 20 a couple of months earlier. None of the legal proceedings we read take that into account. She was not an adult when she was interrogated, for example, making the interrogation illegal in just one more way. Not only should a lawyer have been present, an adult like a parent or guardian should have been present. Where were her parents at this point? It only takes one day to fly to Italy from the US. I guess her rich parents couldn't be bothered?

On the night of November 5, Knox voluntarily went to the police station. Knox was not provided with legal counsel, as Italian law only mandates the appointment of a lawyer for someone suspected of a crime.[\[48\]](#)

If Knox was not suspected of a crime, why was she interrogated for four days? You don't interrogate witnesses for four straight days in that manner. In fact, you cannot legally do so, and double that if the witness is underage.

The first detective on the scene was Monica Napoleoni. Really, a Napoleon as our female detective here? Isn't that cosy? But no one thought that was strange. She was a rookie detective on her first major case (of course she was), and her superior soon bailed, leaving Napoleoni in charge of the biggest case in the history of Perugia. Because that makes sense.

The head of homicide, Monica Napoleone, was horrified at the wounds, especially the savage cut to the throat. Meredith had sustained 47 cuts and bruises, which implied that more than one person had been involved in her killing.

That's from the Daily Mail in 2012. In an article written by John Kercher, the victim's father. 47 cuts and bruises. How tidy. It was that or 33. 47 is year one of the CIA, so that is their calling card. Also notice that they can't keep Napoleoni's name straight from article to article. Also notice that Kercher calls Napoleoni the head of homicide. Except that according to other outlets, she was not head of anything, just a young detective leading her "first investigation".

Then there is the strange case of Rudy Guede, who ended up being convicted of the murder.

The required black patsy for the event. How much was he paid to take the rap? We know his conviction was fake as well. How?

Rudy drifted and was fed, clothed, and housed by an informal group of well-meaning households, until the age of 17 when he was adopted by a wealthy Perugian family.[\[37\]](#)[\[39\]](#)[\[36\]](#) He played basketball for the Perugia youth team in the 2004–2005 season.[\[40\]](#)

Makes sense to me, Boss. What wealthy Italian family doesn't want to adopt an underage street criminal from the Ivory Coast? Yes, Rudy was also 20, so not an adult. They needed him as a ringer for the short Italian basketball team, I guess. Rather than live with his rich Italian family, Rudy naturally preferred to sleep in the basement of these rich white American/British chicks. And these girls figured, why not? What could go wrong? What American girl living in Europe doesn't want a flat with a tall black criminal living in the basement? And don't imagine I am being racist: it is part of the mainstream story that Rudy was known to be a criminal.

What most people don't know is that the name Guede is a giveaway here, since the name is big in the Ivory Coast. Wiki doesn't give the name of Guede's parents, simply telling you his father was an immigrant. His mother isn't mentioned. But see Jean Lorougnon Guede University in Daloa, Ivory Coast. That was named for Jean Lorougnon Guede, Vice President of the Congress in the Ivory Coast in the 1960s. He later became Minister of Education and then the first Minister of Scientific Research. My guess is Rudy Guede is related to him. Maybe his grandson. It reminds us of the fake underwear bomber in the US, Umar Farouk Abdulmutallab, who we later found out was the son of the richest man in Nigeria, Chairman of the First Bank of Nigeria. Umar has a degree in mechanical engineering from University College London. His shadow is now serving a fake life sentence in ADX Supermax in Colorado, along with a lot of other fictional entities.

Then there is this:

Guede was arrested in Germany on November 20, then extradited to Italy on December 6. Guede opted to be tried in a special fast-track procedure by Judge Micheli. He was not charged with having had a knife. He did not testify and was not questioned about his statements, which he had changed compared to what he originally said.[\[26\]](#)[\[71\]](#)[\[81\]](#)

Ah, the old bench trial we know and love! No jury, just closed doors with one paid-off CIA pretend judge. They call it a “fast-track” trial, but don't explain why anyone would “opt for” this. Why would anyone wave their rights to a real trial? Notice that he did not testify, but they admit they did use all his previous testimony before trial, since he did not use his right to remain silent, blabbing over and over and changing his story multiple times in pretrial interrogations. Just as with the bench trial we have seen over and over in US fake events, no real events proceed this way. If Guede had been adopted by rich Italians, they should have hired him a fancy lawyer, and that lawyer would have never agreed to this fast-track thing, since Guede got nothing out of it. He was judged guilty and sentenced to 30 years, so there was nothing like a plea bargain.

In the case of Knox and her boyfriend, the final judges admitted the whole thing was a hash, saying the case was “without foundation”. Hmmm, sounds like a CIA case, doesn't it?

The delegate supreme judge, court adviser Gennaro Marasca, made public the reasons of absolution. First, none of the evidence demonstrated that either Knox or Sollecito was present at the crime scene. Second, they cannot have "materially participated in the homicide", since absolutely no "biological traces ... could be attributed to them in the room of the murder or on the body of the victim, where in contrast numerous traces were found attributable to Guede".[144]

Confirms that the whole thing was manufactured by someone. So if the case against Knox was fiction, and the case against Guede was also fiction—since why else have a closed-door one-judge two-day Star Chamber trial—then NO ONE killed Meredith Kercher. And if no one killed her, then she must still be alive. We know all this other stuff was faked, so it is just one more small step to suggest her death was faked like the rest of it. See how that works?

I am already sick of this thing, so let's skip ahead to the clincher. On Meredith Kercher's page we are told she was known as “Mez”. What? How do you get Mez from Meredith? Well, pay attention now:

In the city, Kercher shared a four-bedroom, first-floor flat in a house at Via della Pergola 7.[8] Her flatmates were two Italian women in their late 20s, Filomena Romanelli and Laura Mezzetti, and a 20-year-old American student from the University of Washington, Amanda Knox, who was attending the University for Foreigners in Perugia on an exchange year.

Did you catch that, Sherlock? Her housemate was Laura Mezzetti. So it would have been Laura that was known as Mez, not Kercher. Except that, she never had a housemate named Laura Mezzetti, since Laura Mezzetti never existed. Laura Mezzetti was just another name for Meredith Kercher—her MI6 codename, if you like. So she faked her death and became this Laura Mezzetti person. The old Shakespearean head-trick, like we saw with Sharon Tate and her pretend sister Patti, and Nicole Simpson and her pretend sister Denise, and Amelia Earhart and her pretend sister Muriel.

So I have now not only shown you what was done and why, but how it was done. So the bet is mine.

And yes, this means neither Knox nor Guede ever spent a minute in a real jail. It was all fiction.

*I am told she was only engaged to Sutherland, later marrying a Christopher Robinson.

Lovely couple, right?