

Abdul Ballout

Really? Abdul Balls-Out? Was he showing brain? They aren't even trying.

Or maybe the adolescents in German intelligence are trying a bit too hard.

That's the guy who supposedly drove into a crowd at a Berlin Pride Festival yesterday, killing one person and injuring 16 . . . or is it 29 . . . they can't decide. My guess is it will end up at 33. He was later killed by police while brandishing a machete. All balls.

To start with, that isn't a mugshot, since he isn't wearing prison clothes and has no sign. Looks more like a passport photo. And that car hasn't hit a pedestrian at a festival, it has hit a tree. It doesn't match the story we are told.

Over 2,000 police were involved in the manhunt, so they burned a lot of Berlin taxes that day on overtime and special forces. And of course the pride thing tells you what it was really all about: keeping the fire hot between gays and straights, left and right.

And what kind of moron is going to attack 2,000 cops with a machete? Does he look like a moron in the picture above? No, he looks pretty intelligent to me. Just intelligent enough to be an agent.

He was found in a garden shed in Berlin-Spandau. Of course he was. They needed to get Spandau in there for another joke.

He was (previously) arrested in Lebanon for trying to join Islamic State in Syria and planning a terror attack.

That's how we know it is fake even without the Balls-out thing. There is no Islamic State (ISIS) in Syria, except some cover band of CIA agents. All terror attacks are false flags and always have been, to create a fake enemy. If he had been previously arrested in Lebanon for that, he would have been on an international watch-list and would have never been allowed to come into Germany.

The outlet added, "The 21-year-old man named by police as Abdul B. last year traveled to the Middle East in a failed attempt to join IS, according the Bild and Spiegel newspapers. He was then convicted in Germany of "preparing a serious act of subversive violence," the papers report."

What's the problem there, Sherlock? If he was convicted of that, how could he be on the streets a year later? I guess they let him out to get his actor's equity card renewed.

He was convicted and sentenced for terrorism offences in May 2026 but released on time served.

His time served was less than a year, assuming he was ever in jail (which he wasn't), so Germany doesn't seem to take terrorism very seriously. They didn't even deport him.

German authorities told him to attend de-radicalisation counselling sessions.

Yeah, that would work with terrorists, right?

In May 2026, the Amtsgericht Tiergarten in Berlin sentenced him to a youth sentence of 1 year and 10 months for preparation of a serious state-endangering violent act.

Notice the youth sentence, because he was a few months short of 21, I guess. However, that doesn't work because:

He was already known to police for other offenses, including aggravated assault and extortion.

As a repeat felony offender, he could not have been eligible for a youth sentence and leniency. As usual, they can't keep their stories straight because they know neatness doesn't count. They think you will believe anything, so they don't even hire a proof reader for continuity.

Should the reported details prove accurate, the gap between the known risk and this lenient handling is hard to reconcile with basic public-safety priorities.

But it isn't hard to reconcile with my reading, is it? Of course he was immediately back on the street, since he was never in jail to start with. It is all Hollywood.

Another way we know is that Tommy Robinson, British MI6 agent, real name Yaxley-Lennon, who I have outed before, immediately made a wildly contradictory statement, to further bake you:

There is currently a manhunt in Berlin for 'known' Islamist Abdul B for predominantly peacefully driving straight through a pride parade while advocating for the religion of peace.

What? Running over 17 people is a peaceful drive through a parade? Why would he say that? To add to the confusion. The more confused you are, the more likely you are to just accept it all and move on.

the latest violence is another reminder that jihadist networks remain among the country's most serious national security threats.

So be sure to pay higher taxes to support military and police, including Intelligence! You can expect several of these in the next few months in the US, since without paying $1.5 trillion a year for defense and another half billion for a network of Intelligence agencies, your children and hamsters just won't be safe.
