

Bonnie and Clyde

You know the drill: go down their Wiki page looking for red flags, then link out from there. It isn't hard.

We'll start with that photo above. How staged is that? I hope the shotgun isn't loaded, or she could accidentally shoot him in the belly. First thing they teach you: NEVER do that. But lady actors for the FBI don't know that.

Bonnie Parker was born October 1, 1910, aces and eights. Mother was Emma Krause, so I assume Jewish. We are told her parents were a bricklayer and a seamstress, but that sounds like the usual fiction, so I will assume she was from wealth for now. We will see how that plays out. They admit Bonnie was in drama in school and wanted to be an actress. I will show you that is exactly what she was. She also wrote poems and was a professional photographer. Sounds like a rich girl to me already. Photography is an expensive hobby, and was even more expensive back then when the cameras were bigger.

She allegedly married Roy Thornton at age 15 and never divorced him, still wearing his ring at her "death". Makes no sense, does it? Thornton was nabbed for robbery in 1933, note the date, and allegedly got himself killed trying to escape in 1937, at age 29. Bonnie was 23 in 1933.

After she left Thornton, Parker moved back in with her mother and worked as a waitress in Dallas. One of her regular customers was postal worker Ted Hinton. In 1932, he joined the Dallas County Sheriff's Department and eventually served as a member of the posse that killed Bonnie and Clyde.[\[12\]](#)

But that's not suspicious, is it? And they admit below that Hinton knew the Barrows from childhood. Sounds like Hinton was a boyfriend or cousin, otherwise how would we know this? Do you think we know every customer of some poor waitress in Dallas in 1930? In fact, Hinton later admitted he had a crush on Bonnie. But this means the pool of the cast of actors here was very small, all being hired out of the same extended family. A huge red flag.

So let's look him up. We find this on his page at Findagrave:

After the deaths of Bonnie and Clyde Ted would remain in close contact with the families and look out for their interests.

Makes no sense, does it? He kills them in a hail of bullets and then remains close friends with their families? His first wife was Grace Hicks, wealthy daughter of John Russell Hicks. She was also a Jackson—tying her to many of these people in the story—as well as a Black, a Bayless, a Lewis, a McKinney, and a . . . Booth. The last in this line that Findagrave mentions is Joseph Boothe (wife Sarah Dutton) of Pennsylvania, born c 1760. His daughter Jane Booth Kyker/Keicher is listed in Virginia in 1782. Lewis and McKinney also tie Hicks to many in this story, as you will see. The Hintons of Dallas are related to the Hamiltons via the Ellises, possibly linking Hinton to Barrow Gang members Ray Hamilton and Henry Methvin (whose grandfather was Hamilton Methvin). Ted Hinton's grandmother was Martha Ellis.

Clyde Chestnut Barrow. Barrow being a red flag off the top, a big peerage name we saw in my paper on Isaac Newton, related to the Stewarts. Barrow is also Jewish, being a variant of Barent/Baron, as in Sacha Baron Cohen. His parents also had upperclass names: Cumie Talitha Walker and Henry Basil Barrow. Those aren't the names of a seamstress and bricklayer, you know. I remind you the Walkers are related to the Bushes, think George Walker Bush. And Cumie is obviously a nickname, so why not tell us her given name? According to Namepedia:

Cumie or Cumi originates from the Hebrew name "Kum" or "Cumah," meaning "up" or "arise".

Best guess is that links us to the name Komnene/Comnene somehow. But it proves the Jewish guess at any rate. Talitha is also an Aramaic name:

Talitha is a feminine name of Aramaic origin that means "little girl". It is most often associated with the Biblical story in the Gospel of Mark, in which Jesus is said to have resurrected a dead child with the words "Talitha cumi" or "Talitha kum" (Mark 5:41).

So the two names go together.

The Barrows spent their first months there living under their wagon until they got enough money to buy a tent.[\[19\]](#)

Right. If you believe that you need serious help from Mars.

Clyde had a brother Buck whose real name was Marvin Ivan Barrow. Ivan? So we have some hidden Russian roots here as well. He married Bennie Iva Caldwell, called Blanche, and they both have upperclass looks as well:

Even in that horrible picture, she looks like a Vogue model. In fact she was a model, see here. There are dozens of photos of her online:

Not really looking like a poor moll from Oklahoma, is she?

He looks like an attorney. They were obviously pasted in front of that Oil and Gas sign. The photo has so little resolution to hide the seams. Bennie is also a nickname, so again, why not tell us her real given name? Could be short for Bennett, Benicia, or Bernice. My guess is Bennett. Her father was Matthew Fontaine Caldwell, another peerage name. Caldwell being a noble Scottish name and Fontaine being a noble French name. She was played by Estelle Parsons in the movie, so probably a cousin.

Clyde's sister Nell May married Wyatt Norman Francis, whose mother was Theodosia Cook—Theodosia being another Phoenician name. Wyatt's sister Inez married Joseph Weldon Greenwood, and the Greenwoods were also Sanders and Forsythe. These are the famous Greenwoods of Arkansas, taking us back to Alfred Burton Greenwood, evil Commissioner of Indian Affairs under President Buchanan. These Greenwoods go back to the Greenwoods of Essex, England, who are in the peerage. They were related to the Hamars, and Hamar=Hamer, see below for the Texas Ranger who allegedly killed Bonnie and Clyde, Francis Hamer. The Greenwoods of the peerage were also related to the Spencers and Bells. See below for Blanche Barrow's mother Lilian Bell Pond.

Clyde's other sister Artie married Wilbur Winkler, Jewish. Think Henry Winkler, aka the Fonz. Wilbur's aunt Emma married a Cromwell. An uncle Fred married Watie Lewis, whose mother was a Keith of Baltimore. See below, where Barrow Gang member Henry Methvin's mother Avie married a Keith. These Lewises were also Newtons: see Blanche Caldwell Barrow again, who was also a Newton.

Clyde's other sister Lilian married two Jewish men: Willard Sellers and William Jacobs Grissaffi. Her third husband Luke Scoma may also be Jewish.

Clyde's other brother Leon Clayborn married Leona van Vost, who was also a Kaster/Caster/Kuster/Custer, putting her in the direct lines of Queen Isabella of Spain according to Findagrave. Wow, didn't know that. So we just solved the problem of General Custer, didn't we? These Kusters first go back to Kaldenkirchen in Germany, and then to Pieter Koster the Mennonite preacher executed in 1535. Just going back at Findagrave, I wasn't able to find exactly how Kuster links us to Queen Isabella, but did find links to Dohrs, op den Graeff, Adams, Brock, von Haren, DeWeese, Nuzam, and Theisson (Theissen—see the billionaire who bankrolled Hitler Fritz Thyssen).

Another member of the fake Barrow Gang was Raymond Elzie Hamilton. You have to laugh. So now we just need a Stanley and a Cohen. And again he is hiding behind that nickname Elzie. Why not tell us the real name? Well, his mother was a Bullock, Jewish, think Sandra Bullock. So Elzie is short for Eliezer/Eleazer, another Jewish name meaning “God helps”. El meaning god, as you know. His grandmother was a Newsom.

He used to fence stolen bicycles through future sheriff Smoot Schmid and began committing petty thefts.[\[citation needed\]](#)

So like Bonnie, Hamilton was also working with law enforcement from an early age. Again, we should assume Schmid was a cousin, with links to FBI. J. Edgar Hoover was using these people like he used Capone, Dillinger, and the rest of the FBI cast of bad guys, to create work for the FBI and keep its budgets fat. Hamilton's girl was Mary Chambless, sister of O'Dell Chambless, two more peerage names. Chambless=Chambliss=DeChambeau=Chamblee. All related to the Rockefellers. See golfer Bryson DeChambeau, middle name Aldrich. Aldrich=Eldrick, as in Tiger Woods (Eldrick Cruise). The Chambliss family goes back to John Randolph Chambliss, b. 1809, Virginia, of the famous Randolphs related to Thomas Jefferson. John's mother was Lucille Rives Newsom. Who else was a Newson? Ray Hamilton above, proving all these people were cousins.

Mary and O'Dell weren't the only FBI actors named Chambless/Chambliss, see fake clansman Robert Chambliss, “Dynamite Bob”, who allegedly blew up the 16th Street Church in Birmingham in 1963, killing four little black girl actresses. His fellow actors were named Cherry, Blanton, and Cash. Woody Allen is a Cherry, telling us the usual thing. Those three guys skated because Hoover shut down the vaudeville in 1968. I guess it was full of too many holes. But Chambliss was finally taken to trial in 1977, after Hoover died.

Chambliss claimed that it was Gary Thomas Rowe Jr., an FBI informant, who had planted the dynamite at the church.[\[6\]](#) Investigative records show that Rowe, who was no stranger to dynamite, had twice failed polygraph tests when questioned as to his possible involvement in the bombing.[\[7\]](#) Because of this, the FBI and Alabama Attorney General prosecutor Bill Baxley did not use Rowe as a witness in Chambliss's trial.[\[8\]](#)

Hmmm. So FBI bombed a condemned church and fake the deaths of four girls. We have seen it a hundred times. And who was Rowe? Not only COINTELPRO, admitted at Wiki, but his mother was a Sellars, Jewish, linking us to the rest of these actors. He was also a Marine. But the part about Rowe not being called in trial is impossible, since it would be defense calling Rowe, not prosecution, and no one could stop them. Rowe failing to be called to the stand would be a slamdunk in any appeal. And if you are thinking Rowe entrapped Chambliss or infiltrated the Klan, you aren't thinking: the Klan was also an FBI front. It had been created by US Intelligence back in the 1800s, but FBI expanded it when Hoover took over. The Chambleys were French nobles back to at least the 1200s, when they were related to the Dukes of Bourgogne and Kings of Portugal. They were also related to the Sachsen (Saxes) and Hohenstaufens, linking them to the Kings of Austria and Holy Roman Emperors.

Another member of the fake Barrow Gang was Henry Methvin (above), which is a variant of Methven/Methuen. So he is another cloaked rich guy. Which is what he looks like in that picture above, from Findagrave. That doesn't match what we were told of the Barrow Gang, does it? And it doesn't match the mugshots of him at Wiki, though he looks posh in both. The Methvins were Earls in the area of Perth, Scotland, according to this page at Wikitree. The Methvens were also Stewarts, see Henry Stewart, Lord Methven. These Lords Methven later became Smythes and married Graham and Murray and Lyon and Oswald, linking them to other lines in the upper reaches of the peerage.

Henry Methvin's father was also named Ivan, like Clyde's brother. They called him Ivy to hide that. Didn't work. His mother is given as Avie Stephens, but that looks pawed again. Avie isn't a given name, it is short for something. A search finds it is again Hebrew, short for Avram. Findagrave has no parents for her, but does tell us her second husband was a Keith, grandson of a Simeon Keith. So Jewish again, and likely of the peerage Keiths we saw in my paper on Ben Franklin. Simeon married Louisiana Brooks, though she is scrubbed from his Findagrave page. His son John Jefferson married Mary Valentine, which is a clue in the same direction as all these others. See my paper on Mark Twain for more on the Valentines. If you aren't getting it, the Valentines were also Zieglers, Myers, and Walkers.

The Methvins in the US came from the Methvens of Scotland, settling in Georgia, then Louisiana and East Texas around 1825, still wealthy. These are the Methvins we are looking at with Henry, as is proved by his pages at Findagrave. In Texas they bought 1200 acres and founded the town of Longview in East Texas.

And it gets better, because Ivan Methvin's father was Hamilton Terrell Methvin and his sister married a Campbell. We already saw Hamilton above, so we link two more of the fake Barrow Gang by hidden bloodlines. They are actor/cousins.

While we are at it, I remind you J. Edgar Hoover's mother was a Scheitlin, and her mother was a Hitz. Jewish both. See the Brothers Scheitlin, a big publishing house in Germany in the 19th century. The Scheitlins were Jewish merchants of Ulm back to the 1400s, one later becoming a fake Lutheran theologian in Heilbronn, pushing the usual discord for that back to the 1540s. The Hitz were wealthy miners from Davos, Switzerland, Hoover's grandfather John being Consul General before moving the US, where he was a close friend of Helen Keller. His mother was a Kohler.

His wife was a Shanks, Jewish. His brother George married Luzia Wetzel, Jewish. Their son was William Hitz, Justice of the Court of Appeals.

On his father's side, Hoover was a Naylor and a Lindsay, of the Lindsays of Baltimore. In fact, he is from these Lindsays in at least two lines, due to cousin marriages. In the Hoover line he is also a Huff, scrubbed, but Huff is short for Hoffmann, Jewish of course. At Findagrave, J. Edgar's pages end in Maria Barbara Zell, Zell also being Jewish, as in Zellner. Her husband is scrubbed, but someone has added a note that he is Michael Hoover, b. 1774, of York Co., PA.

But back to Methvin. We are told he killed a lot of people with zero evidence, but then he allegedly was convicted for killing Constable Cal Campbell in 1935 at age 23 and given the death penalty. I remind you his aunt had married a Campbell and was then named Campbell. Somehow he was out by 1942, just over six years later. Not sure how that works. We may assume he was never in jail, since he was just another actor. In 1945 he was arrested for robbery but somehow skated again. He allegedly died in 1948 at age 36, run over by a dad-gummed train. Not easy to get run over by a train, you know. His father Ivan was run over just a year earlier.

Now to the fake crimes. Clyde was first arrested at age 20 for driving a stolen car, but he took the opportunity to confess to several crimes he wasn't even accused of, including two burglaries . . .

because that makes sense. He was given two years, but allegedly escaped. He was caught after another crime spree, but given only 14 years, and served less than two. We are told his mother got him out, not sure how.

Clyde rejoined with Bonnie immediately and began robbing stores and gas stations. Bonnie was caught but released when a jury failed to indict. Sure. It was in the script, so sure.

On October 11, they allegedly killed Howard Hall at his store during a robbery in Sherman, Texas, though some historians consider this unlikely.^[36]

Aces and eights. Hmmm. So historians aren't sure this happened at all. No body for this Howard Hall, I guess, like the rest of this myth. In 1933 Clyde's brother "Buck" got pardoned and released from prison, and he and his girl Blanche joined the gang. He was pardoned again due to the pleas of his mother, the omnipotent Cumie Talitha Walker, who could apparently get anyone out of prison with a single tear on her Jewish handkerchief.

On November 11, 1929, Barrow met Blanche Caldwell in West Dallas, an unincorporated part of Dallas County. They fell in love almost immediately.

Why do we need to know the day they met? Only because it is 11/11. Another signal of the fake.

In April 1933, the Gang got in a shootout with lawmen in Joplin, MO:

The surviving officers later testified that they had fired only 14 rounds in the conflict; ^[47] one hit Jones on the side, one struck Clyde but was deflected by his suit-coat button, and one grazed Buck after ricocheting off a wall.

Oivay, the spook writers just love that dodge of bullets ricocheting off coat buttons. Except in the case of huge, thick metal buttons, that has never happened in the history of the world, and no one was wearing buttons like that in 1933. So this is strictly Hollywood. Those writers don't know how the real world works and don't give a flip, as we have seen a million times. They say anything, knowing their audience of ninnies will believe it. We saw it recently with Charlie Kirk, as a high-powered rifle bullet supposedly was stopped by his neck.

The group escaped Joplin police, but left behind most of their possessions at the apartment, including Buck's parole papers (three weeks old), a large arsenal of weapons, a handwritten poem by Bonnie, and a camera with several rolls of undeveloped film.^[48] Police developed the film at The Joplin Globe and found many photos of Barrow, Parker, and Jones posing and pointing weapons at one another. ^[49] The Globe sent the poem and the photos over the newswire, including a photo of Parker clenching a cigar in her teeth and a pistol in her hand.^[notes 3] The Barrow Gang subsequently became front-page news throughout the United States.

Wow, how convenient is that for ole J. Edgar, whose FBI was expanding like wildfire in 1933, just looking for things to do?

In his book Go Down Together: The True, Untold Story of Bonnie and Clyde, writer

Jeff Guinn noted:

John Dillinger had matinee-idol good looks [no he didn't] and Pretty Boy Floyd had the best possible nickname, but the Joplin photos introduced new criminal superstars with the most titillating trademark of all—illicit sex. Clyde Barrow and Bonnie Parker were wild and young, and undoubtedly slept together.[50]

Again, what luck for Hoover and the FBI that the perfect criminals sprung out of the ground as if on cue! It seems that always happens somehow. No explaining it.

In July 1933, the gang checked into the Red Crown Tourist Court[66] south of Platte City, Missouri. It consisted of two brick cabins joined by garages, and the gang rented both.[66] To the south stood the Red Crown Tavern, a popular restaurant among Missouri Highway Patrolmen, and the gang seemed to go out of their way to draw attention.[67]

Makes sense, right? You have killed dozens of officers and are #1 on the most wanted list, pictured in all the newspapers, and you decide to check into a motel right next to a tavern with state troopers parked outside? Blanche Barrow was wearing jodhpurs and riding boots, to stand out even more.

There she is getting arrested. That photo is a paste and a horrible act, but still. It reminds you what a joke this all is, since jodhpurs and riding boots are worn by aristocrats, not poor hick criminals just out of jail. That's what you wear to play polo. Can't see the paste? Look at the guy holding her, the line of him to your left. See how he is outlined, like with a Marks-a-lot?

In the gunfight that ensued, the officers' .45 caliber Thompsons proved no match for Barrow's .30 caliber BAR, stolen on July 7 from the National Guard armory at Enid, Oklahoma.^[73] The gang escaped when a bullet short-circuited the horn on the armored car^[notes 10] and police officers mistook it for a cease-fire signal. They did not pursue the retreating Barrow vehicle.^[66]

So the great scriptwriting continues. They didn't pursue because a bullet hit the car horn and they thought it was a cease-fire signal. So they stood there stupidly as the gang piled into the car and drove off right in front of them.

Despite being pursued by all the police and Feds of 10 states,

They restocked their arsenal when Barrow and Jones robbed an armory on August 20 at Plattville, Illinois, acquiring three BARs, handguns, and a large quantity of ammunition.^[78]

Really? Two guys attacked an armory? I guess a bullet hit a chicken and the soldiers thought the clucking was a stand-down order from the colonel.

Next they drove down to Houston and broke Hamilton and Methvin out of the jail there. This put Texas Ranger Francis Augustus Hamer on their tails, and he is sold as the ultimate tough guy, with 17 wounds and 53 kills. Note how both add to eight.

Looks like another blob to me. Couldn't have been much of a man or he wouldn't have gotten involved in this Bonnie and Clyde vaudeville as an actor.

In 1917, Hamer married Gladys (Johnson) Sims, the widow of Ed Sims of Snyder, Texas; she and her brother, Sidney Arthur Johnson, had been charged in 1916 with murdering Sims. Hamer and Gladys and other family members were stopped at a garage on October 1, 1917 to get gasoline in Sweetwater when they suddenly encountered Gus McMeans of Odessa, Ed Sims' brother-in-law, and the Hamers and McMeans got into a pistol battle. McMeans was a former Texas Ranger and sheriff of Ector County, and he and Hamer "were clinched"; McMeans died of a shot to the heart and Hamer was wounded. Ten shots were fired in the gunfight, and police collected a total of seven revolvers, two semi-automatic pistols, and three rifles from the two parties.[7]

If you can't recognize that as the usual bullshit, there is no help for you. If Hamer had really killed a sheriff, he would have spent the rest of his life in jail. Instead,

Following this, Hamer left the Cattlemen's Association to accept a position as a federal agent in the Prohibition Unit, where he served for about one year.

Skated completely. Not even an inquest, though it involved two lawmen. We are told a grand jury failed to indict. Maybe that's because Gus McMeans was really Walter Gee McMeans, husband of Ed Sims' sister Nina Frances. He died in 1975 at age 69, not in 1917, when he was 11. All these people have Findagrave pages, so it is hard to believe they are still printing these lies at Wikipedia. You will say they mean his father. That would be Isaiah McMeans, who did indeed die in 1917, but you can see why they would be hiding his first name. They also don't want you researching these top families of Snyder, who are all crypto-Jews. The McMeans there were also Bachmans, Bolens, Stones, Bells (that again), Fullers, Reeds, Perrys (that again), Hulseys (Hulse, think actor Tom Hulse who played Mozart in Amadeus), Wozencrafts, Lasseters, and Colclasures (which Findagrave misspells Colcleasure, for some reason). Searching on these Wozencrafts of Texas finds they are Stewarts. They are also Bennetts, confirming my previous guess on that. The Lasseters are also Caldwells.

So let's continue to dig on these people. Hamer's wife Gladys Johnson had been married to Ed Sims, as they admit there. What they don't tell you is that his full name was Edward Caldwell Sims. We've already seen that name, haven't we? Blanche Barrow, Buck's wife, was really Bennie Caldwell, remember? So more cousins. Hamer was related to the Barrows through his wife. And Gladys apparently married a close cousin when she married Ed, since her mother was a Sims. Same things with Gus McMeans, whose mother was also a Sims. So we have just discovered a double cousin marriage here.

Hamer's first wife was debutante Mollie Cameron Ford.

Note the fox fur. She not only comes from the Camerons but also from the Shamburgers. Her first husband Raymond Elwood Ford was the son of Isaac Greenberry (Greenberg) Ford. Her brother married Irene Klentzmann. Her sister married Paul Bruno Nagel.

Hamer's son Francis Jr. married a Bissell. She was also a Livingstone through her grandfather William Livingstone, the billionaire Detroit banker. He was also the head of two shipping companies and the Detroit Evening Journal. Also collector of customs. Her other grandfather was George Gordon Bissell, and her grandmother was a von Rosenberg, of the Jewish noble Rosenbergs who came from Germany to Texas in 1849. They were Barons who, through the Waldenburgs, were closely related to the Kings of Prussia. This tells you what you should already know: Hamer=Hammer. And that is confirmed at Findagrave on the pages for this Frank Hamer. These are the Hammers of Bucks Co., PA, where they were also Zindelins, Flemings, Bonsors, Tichnors, and Myers. We are told they were blacksmiths, but they weren't blacksmiths any more than Armand Hammer was a blacksmith. The name Augustus tells us that, by itself. It is an old Roman name of course, and blacksmiths don't name themselves after Roman Emperors. Who does? The Phoenicians, of course, which is who we are looking at here, as always.

Hamer's brother was named Flavious Letherage Hamer, Flavius being another Phoenician name. His other brother Harrison married a Rainey, and her aunt Bessie also married a Caldwell. Third time we have seen that. They had no children, but her brother-in-law Henry did. He had two sons: Luther and Howard. I failed to link them to our other Caldwells, but encountered much scrubbing at Findagrave, as usual. So I tried from the direction of Blanche Caldwell Barrow. Wiki says her name is Bennie Iva, but Findagrave lists her as Iva Bennie. Her mother Lilian Bell Pond is scrubbed, which is highly suspicious. Her father Matthew Caldwell is listed, and we learn his sisters married Reeves and Clements. Matthew's middle name should be Fontaine, not Fontain, just as I said above. His brother is Edward Newton, and his father is Newton. Another brother married a Garrison of the famous Garrisons of South Carolina, related the Telfords. Telford=Telfer, and Matt Damon is a Telfer. The name Newton comes from these Garrisons.

W. D. Jones, another Barrow Gang member, was the son of Tookie Garrison, providing us another link between Hamer and the Barrow Gang. And I draw your attention to the fact they have done it again: Tookie is a nickname, not a given name. She is listed at Findagrave, but her father is hidden to hide these Garrisons. Her mother is Laura Perry, daughter of Solomon Perry, also scrubbed for obvious reasons. But they do link us to the Sanders and Randolphs, closing more circles here. Clyde's sister Nell married a Sanders, remember, and Hamilton's girl Mary Chambliss was a Randolph. These Sanders in the Jones/Garrison line go back to Jabez Sanders who married a Lewis. I remind you that Clyde's uncle Fred married a Lewis, so the Barrow Gang was all cousins, closely related to one another as well as to the upperclass Texas Rangers.

As for the Caldwells, they soon end, but we find them married to the Mosses several times, and Moss=Moses, confirming our main line here. We also find these Mosses related to the McCowns, and of course Cown=Cohen.

Hamer's great-aunt Cora married a Jacobs, proving that again. Another great-aunt married an Ira Heiskill. A great-uncle was named Ethelbert Hammer. Oh, and all these guys were Masons.

To show you what kind of guy this hero Hamer really was, see this:

During the 1930s, Hamer applied his civil peace-keeping skills to working on behalf of various oil companies and shippers, which were resisting unionization of their companies, and he often performed as a strike breaker.

Peace-keeping, right. More like a paid goon of the millionaires, to rough up people asking for a fair wage. But it gets worse:

At the outbreak of war in Europe in 1939, he and 49 other retired Texas Rangers offered their services to King George VI to help protect the United Kingdom in case of Nazi invasion.^[17]

Gag. 49 aged Texas Rangers attacking Nazi Germany, with flamethrowers I guess. Now we know where Tarantino got that great idea. But again this tells us who we are dealing with, since these are Jewish story lines.

If you aren't sick yet, here's another one:

In September 1948 [he was 64], Hamer was called back to Ranger duty to play a small role in the notorious 1948 United States Senate election in Texas.^{[42][43]} Former Governor Coke Stevenson hired him to accompany him to the Texas State Bank in Alice to examine the tally sheets for ballot box 13, which held ballots for his opponent, Representative Lyndon B. Johnson, which he knew to be fraudulent. Outside the bank stood two glowering groups of armed men. Hamer got out of the car, approached the first group, and said "git" and they left. The second group was blocking the doors of the bank, and he said "fall back" and they complied.^[44]

The issue wasn't decided by some fat-ass geriatric Texas Ranger standing down two groups of armed men singlehandedly, and it wasn't decided in favor of Stevenson. I am not saying LBJ didn't steal the election, but Hamer did nothing to prevent it. What if they didn't git? Was he going to high-kick them to death with his cowboy boots, like Uma Thurman in yellow spandex?

Amusingly, Hamer was played by the bumbling Denver Pyle in the Beatty movie, and wasn't depicted as a tough guy. The writers Newman and Benton basically made fun of him, so much so Hamer's family sued for defamation. We are told they received some out-of-court settlement, though it couldn't have been much since they had no case. You can't defame a dead man, by law. But I find it funny that I am not the only one who thought Hamer's story was all braggadocio. Even his own cousins in Hollywood didn't buy it. They had been paid to resell Bonnie and Clyde as part of the ongoing Operation Chaos, but that didn't mean they had to keep inflating Hamer and the Texas Rangers as well.

Let's also take a look at Smoot Schmid, the Dallas sheriff who offered the reward for B&C. Not once on their page do they tell you his real name, but it was Richard Allen and he has a Findagrave page. But before we go there, we find that this reward was said to be $26,000, about 25 times that now, but they now admit most of the organizations that pledged money for that reneged, each of the six lawmen receiving only $200 in reward money. You have to laugh. Anyway, Schmid was also a rookie, like Hinton, coming in as sheriff in 1933, just in time for this stageplay. He was 6'5" and his father was Abraham Schmid, said to have come over from Switzerland. His mother was a Forler from Canada and her mother was a Schnepp from Alsace (France). These Schnepps are also Weissgerber, Mauser, Roesch, Noehl, Wolff, and Orndorff. So Jewish again. Schmid's sister married a Chapman, whose mother was a Lewis, so he is related to everyone here as well. His other sister married a Corley who was also a Walker, ditto. We have seen them many times here. One of these Walkers was married to a Cuemillie Gray Walker. Can you unwind that? I will give you a minute.

Scan back above, where we saw Clyde's mother was Cumie Walker. Cuemillie is the same name again, isn't it? Both of them are Hebrew and are variants of Kumi. So Schmid was closely related to Clyde Barrow. This was basically the entire Dallas cast of the Jerusalem Follies.

See any problems there? I don't see one bullet hole. 112 bullets and the front windshield is intact. Headlights intact. No blood. You will say all the bullet holes are in the doors, or on the other side. But you would expect some damage to the far side as well, even if no one shot from that side. And if no one shot from that side of the road, why is the rear wheel off the axle? So apparently that was staged before they shot the car up with holes. Compare to this, the car displayed now in the museum:

Not even the same car, is it? How do I know? Hood ornament. Hub caps. Rear side glass. And again, note how much intact glass there is there.

The place of death just happened to be very near 33 degrees N in Louisiana, so you forgot to ask how Texas Rangers could legally ambush B&C that far over the state line. Bienville Parish isn't even on the border. Texas Rangers have no jurisdiction in Louisiana. You will say two Louisiana officers were also present, making this legal, but I have my doubts. After two years of interstate mayhem, it should have been FBI setting up road blocks, not Texas Rangers. This was 1934, not 1834, so the time of Wild West posses was long over. And even FBI could not just open fire on a passing car: what if this had been the wrong car, with someone who just looked like Barrow? Everyone looked the same back then, with short hair and those hats, so opening fire on passing cars is not a great way to take criminals. We are told the shoot-to-kill order had come down from Texas Prison System Chief Lee Simmons, but he didn't have the authority to give that order, and besides a shoot-to-kill order is far short of a shoot-first-with-no-positive-ID order. They admit that Ted Hinton was the only one on the posse who had seen Bonnie and Clyde in real life and could therefore easily identify him. And again, we already saw that Hinton could identify them since he knew them both personally. He had known the Barrows since childhood and knew Bonnie from the diner if not before, having a crush on her. They also admit he was a rookie in 1934, so why was a sheriff's deputy in his first year on this top assignment? If you are believing any of this you are the perfect fool for these people.

Another problem is that the ambush spot was about 25 east of Shreveport and Methvin's father Ivan lived in Shreveport, with B&C coming to visit him for some reason. But this implies they were driving in from Mississippi. Why would they be driving in from Mississippi? According to the published timeline, they were in Oklahoma and Kansas in April, not Mississippi. To justify having four Texas Rangers on their tails, they should have been coming in from the west.

You know the story of their shooting, but you may not know this:

H. D. Darby, an undertaker at the McClure Funeral Parlor, and Sophia Stone, a home demonstration agent, had both been kidnapped by the gang in 1933.^[116] They came to Arcadia from nearby Ruston to identify the bodies.^[114] Parker had reportedly laughed when she discovered that Darby was an undertaker and flippantly remarked that maybe he would work on her corpse one day, which came true when he assisted Bailey in the embalming process.^[114]

More proof this was a bad script. Bonnie had previously kidnapped her own undertaker.

Next we find this:

The American National Insurance Company of Galveston, Texas, paid the life insurance policies in full on Barrow and Parker.

Proof positive this was all fake. Do you really think any insurance company is going to sell a life insurance policy to #1's on the FBI most wanted list? Not a very good bet, is it? I can tell you that without even checking the actuarial tables.

I've had about enough of this for now, so let's wrap it up by looking briefly at the 1967 film with Warren Beatty and Faye Dunaway, a film Roger Ebert and his early handler Pauline Kael called one of the greatest in American cinema, though I always thought it was flat and ridiculous. Of course I think that even more now that I can see right through it. Beatty is a very mixed bag for me, since Heaven

Can Wait is one of my favorite films. I also like Lilith and Splendor in the Grass, though that probably has more to do with Natalie Wood and Jean Seberg. But other than that Beatty made a career out of selling these historical frauds like Bonnie and Clyde, Bugsy Siegel (Jewish), and John Reed (Reds). I think even Shampoo is one of these films, since I see it as based on Jay Sebring, trying to sell him as a het swinger to back up the Sharon Tate story, when he was actually a cloaked gay ONI agent—Tate's handler, not her boyfriend. In my paper on John Reed, I showed Beatty was a descendant of Reed through the Pomeroy's, so we may assume he is just selling his cousins, as is usual in Hollywood. But that doesn't excuse it, it just makes it worse.

Despite being crap, Bonnie and Clyde was nominated for ten Academy Awards, including best picture, proving it was being promoted by Intelligence, either CIA or FBI or both.

Bonnie and Clyde is considered one of the first films of the New Hollywood era and a landmark picture. It broke many cinematic taboos, and for some members of the counterculture, the film was seen as a "rallying cry" against the establishment, both for its portrayal of a bank robbery as a form of revolution and for its sympathetic depiction of criminals contrasted against the police.^[5]

Bank robbery as a form of revolution? You have to be kidding me! But of course they would rather you rob a bank than be a real revolutionary. It's all about diverting you. The old "Rebel Without a Cause" ploy. Because a rebel couldn't find anything real to rebel against now, right? He needs to invent things to do like James Dean or Clyde Barrow. Chew the scenery and race cars and have illicit sex and rob drugstores (see Drugstore Cowboy) and drive off cliffs (see Thelma and Louise). Anything except resist the Phoenicians in meaningful ways.
