

The Great Columbine Fake

by Miles Mathis

October 3, 2026

Just my opinion as usual, based on free internet research that I provide you below

You would think the mainstream could keep their story straight on this event 27 years later, given all that time to clean it up and remove inconsistencies, but no. Let's go down the Wikipedia page to start.

We'll begin with those photos, tagged as senior year photos at Wiki. Two problems: they were taken outside, and not in the same light. Even if Columbine was trying some novel method of shooting yearbook photos outside (which would not be a good choice due to wind and weather—the girls would not be happy about it), they would shoot them all in the same place, which would be lit the same. But here we see Harris shot in orange, even light, indicating early morning or late evening, while Klebold is shot in raking half light, which blows out his right side almost to white. The same school photographer would never do both. [And how about Dylan's Habsburg jaw and red hair? And his middle name is Bennet. What can we find there? King Charles is a Bennet.]

Heading to the text, we find this very fast:

Early reports characterized them as unpopular and frequent targets of bullying; however, many peers later stated that the two were not near the bottom of the school's social hierarchy, as both had numerous friends and active social lives. Harris and Klebold often wore black trench coats in their everyday attire; as a result, it was initially believed that they were members of a school clique known as the "Trenchcoat Mafia", a group of students who were said to rebel against the school's norms. This was later found to be unsubstantiated, as Harris and Klebold had little to no affiliation with the group.

So, both things were lies. They now admit the boys were not outcasts or feared and that they were not part of any trenchcoat mafia. Someone just made it up. The ever-present spook writers.

Both left behind journals and video recordings, created individually and together, that foreshadowed the massacre and provided insight into their rationale for the shooting. They intended for this material to be widely viewed and to inspire followers, although much of it has never been released by authorities. Detailed information about their private conversations remains limited: aside from the "Basement Tapes", for which only transcripts have been released, along with a brief audio clip recorded surreptitiously by a victim's father, few direct records are available.[\[39\]](#)

If it has never been released, how do we know it exists? We are just supposed to take the word of these authorities? Didn't work with the trenchcoat mafia claim, did it?

A lot of the story was later salted in and expanded by Andrew Solomon in his book Far From the Tree, which is a huge red flag, considering that I have outed him as a major spook here. He also got heavily involved in the Sandy Hook fake, doing pretend interviews with Adam Lanza's father. He allegedly interviewed Peter Lanza but forgot to bring a photographer or a tape recorder. That article he did for The New Yorker is the worst piece of flabby and transparent Mesmerism ever published and Solomon is scum of the scummiest kind. In the same year he did a TED talk entitled "The worst moments in our lives make us who we are". Yeah, he would have to think that since his life is just one long bad moment, if his writing is any indication. Solomon, the Klebolds, the Harrises, and all the rest of these people will end up in the 9th circle of hell, if they aren't there already.

The FBI concluded in May 2000 that Harris exhibited psychopathic traits, including narcissism, unconstrained aggression, and a lack of empathy, while Klebold was described as an angry depressive with a vengeful attitude toward individuals he believed had mistreated him.[5]

However, since neither Harris nor Klebold had been formally diagnosed with any personality disorders during their lifetimes,[6] these conclusions have been criticized and remain debated. In the years after the massacre, news outlets and commentators have attributed the attack to various motivating factors, including bullying, mental illness, racism, psychiatric medication, and exposure to violence in media. The exact motive for the attack remains inconclusive.

So again, you just have to trust the old FBI there, whose psychologists analyzed Harris and Klebold's corpses with inkblot tests. And note how they admit the story was just made up by the media, based on nothing, and against all previous reports. Their parents and friends contradicted all that, saying they had no idea the boys were depressed or violent. A huge crime with no motive that came out of nowhere.

Plus, they now admit Klebold was not troubled. He had been in gifted classes since elementary school, where he thrived. No doubt that is why he was chosen for this. So if anyone has psychopathic traits, it is those like Andrew Solomon and the other agents/writers in the media—including at Wikipedia—selling this fraud and all the others.

In December 1999, before anyone besides investigators had seen them, Time magazine published an article on these tapes.[47] Select victim families and journalists were allowed to view them, though the tapes were then withheld from the public, and later destroyed in 2011, out of fear of inspiring future massacres.[48] Transcripts of some of the dialogue and a short clip recorded surreptitiously by a victim's father still exist, with the transcripts being online via various resources.

So Time published an article on the Basement Tapes, eh, just a few months after the event? And how exactly did Time get a copy of these tapes? FBI leak, I guess. Why dump evidence in an ongoing investigation into the press? Because that was the point of the whole project from the start: Operation Chaos. Get it in the news as soon as possible and keep it there for as long as possible, to do maximum psychological damage. And why were the tapes and transcripts later destroyed? Was that necessary to prevent copycats? No. If they were worried about that, they would never have shown them to journalists or victims to start with, right? They had to claim to destroy it so that they didn't have to create it. This was all faked, so there were no tapes, only a few fake transcripts as part of the overall project script. But they couldn't have people like me going through these tapes or transcripts, showing the anomalies, as I am doing here and as I did with Sandy Hook.

Also see the “Hitmen for Hire” video, which was released. Notice it is filmed in the school when it was empty. This was an early shooter drill, I guess, staged by FBI. That link is to an archived page, since it was taken down. The video used to be on Youtube, but no longer is. They didn't want me picking it apart, I guess.

Another guy who wrote a book on Columbine is reporter Jeff Kass. He was allegedly one of the first reporters on the ground, though he came out of the Los Angeles Times, where he was also involved in the O. J. Simpson fake. A huge red flag. Just before this event he moved to Denver and began freelancing for the Boston Globe, Newsday, US New and World Report, and the Christian Science Monitor, all big CIA fronts of course, but what isn't. The story of why he was doing that from Denver doesn't make much sense.* To get a taste of it, witness this from his own posted bio there:

The Rocky Mountain News also allowed me to mix my love of travel and journalism. While in Cambodia, I hung out with an obscure U.S. military unit (JPAC) that searches for the remains of missing servicemembers. JPAC typically hires locals to help search through vast areas, and I figured it would be interesting to interview a couple Cambodian workers.

So a Colorado paper sent him to Cambodia to work with JPAC? Can you say CIA agent? We see a similar clue in his bio when, at age 22 and just out his bachelor's at UCSB, Kass was sent to Madrid to cover fascists marching under old Franco banners. Sent by whom? He doesn't say. Also curious that the Rocky Mountain News suddenly bloomed briefly right after Columbine, due to Kass and his editor John Temple, but then crashed and burned just nine years later in 2009. By 2006 Temple had moved on. Do you want to guess where? The Washington Post, CIA's own newspaper. Also a Senior Fellow at Stanford, confirming my guesses.

The foreword of Kass's book starts out like this:

A couple of Holden Caulfields run amok stormed into Columbine High School . . .

But wait. Did Holden Caulfield, Salinger's fictional lead of The Catcher in the Rye, ever kill anyone? Was he an alleged mass murderer? Did he wear a trenchcoat or have any weapons? No. But the CIA loves to blackwash Salinger, though we can only guess why: he refused one of his assignments, telling the boys at Langley to stuff it. So whenever this comes up, we know we are in the middle of a CIA fake. The fake Lennon murder, the fake Reagan murder, and so on. So this pegs this as just one more of those, right off the top.

More clues before the first line of the book: Kass nods to fellow agent Hunter S. Thompson in his acknowledgements. But enough of Kass.

The police were slow to enter the school and were strongly criticized for not intervening during the shooting. The incident resulted in the introduction of the immediate action rapid deployment (IARD) tactic, which is used in active-shooter situations

But did it result in that? No. In the Sandy Hook fake there was no immediate action, other than Robbie Parker practicing his lines and Gene Rosen getting his Teddy bears ready. In the Uvalde fake, both local and federal police did nothing for about an hour while the shooter allegedly shot up the place, although there had been many active shooter drills there, including just weeks earlier. Same for most other fake school shootings, which have been allowed to happen. There has been no immediate reaction to anything in any of them.

Both Dylan Klebold and his older brother attended confirmation classes in accordance with the Lutheran tradition.^[10] His parents were pacifists and attended a Lutheran church with their children.

But on Klebold's page, it says,

The family also observed Passover, reflecting Sue's distant Jewish heritage.^{[26][27][28]} Both parents were described as generally non-religious and pacifists who opposed weapons.^{[27][29]}

So Jewish, not Lutheran. And if they were attending church with their children, how could they be “generally non-religious”? No continuity. Sue's last name is Yassenoff, Russian Jewish, and she has her own Wiki page now, where it says this:

Her paternal grandfather, Leo Yassenoff, was a prominent real estate developer and philanthropist in the local Jewish community.^{[6][7][8]} As a result of her family's background, Klebold attended a Reform temple in her youth while also going to church with her maternal grandparents.^{[6][7][9]}

So her Jewish heritage is not distant at all, and she is not non-religious. And what they don't tell you is that Klebold is also a Jewish, name, so Dylan was Jewish on both sides (more on that below). So why would he attend confirmation classes? That story is blown, and Wiki blew it themselves.

They tell us these Yassenoffs are from Columbus, OH, so let's look them up. Leo was a millionaire back when that meant something, and his wife was Betty Lupton. Her mother was Della Bush. Della's husband was Levi Seigal Luptan, so they were also Jewish. Her father was William Henry Bush, the huge hotelier in Denver in the late 1800s, running the Brown Palace. His business partner was Nathaniel Maxcy Tabor, son of Colorado silver king and US Senator Horace Tabor, also Jewish. Tabor was one of the wealthiest men in US history. So as you see the Klebold's history in Denver runs very deep. They didn't just show up in Littleton from Ohio on a lark, as you are told.

But there's more. Leo's sister married an Olch, and I suspect the name has been fudged from Och, to hide a link to Adolph Ochs, also of Ohio, owner of the New York Times. Why do I think that? Because these Olchs related to the Yassenoffs were also haLevi Shushanskys and Greenspans from Ukraine. Some Shushanskys changed their name to Shore when they came to the US. This makes us think of the Russian Jewish Dinah Shore. This also linked Dylan Klebold's mother to the richest Jewish families in Providence, RI. But whatever the case may be there, it is certain that Sue Yassenoff could not have been confused about her Jewish heritage, or the fact she came from top Denver billionaires. That we are never told this is a big clue, since as you see it is certainly to the point. Also very suspicious that they would try to hide it by claiming Dylan was baptized. They work that lie in very early on the page, as you see.

Then we have this problem:

Investigators later concluded that Dylan had experienced severe depression and suicidal ideation since at least 1997,^[21] although his parents did not learn these details until a year after the killings.^[22] In 2009, Klebold wrote for O, The Oprah Magazine, stating that she had no idea Dylan had been depressed or experiencing suicidal thoughts.^[29]

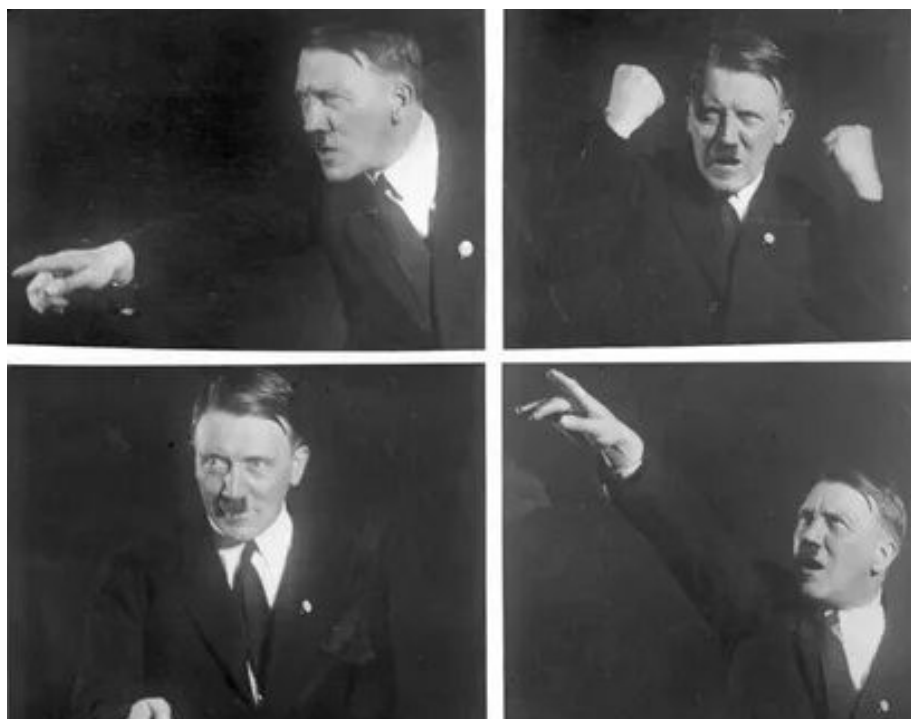

That's from Sue's page. But on the Columbine page, we find:

On January 30, 1998, Harris and Klebold were arrested for breaking into a white van parked near Littleton and stealing tools and computer equipment.^[24] The judge sentenced them to a 12-month juvenile diversion program.^{[25][26]} As a result, they both attended mandatory classes such as anger management and met with diversion officers.^[h] They were both released from the program a month early.^[25]

Klebold also allegedly had multiple pipe bombs in his bedroom. So is Sue telling us she didn't know her son Dylan was in a year-long diversion program which included anger management? Pretty hard to believe, since the parents would have to sign the forms. She didn't ever check his room? She thought the pipe bombs were bongos or peace pipes, I guess. So this story has zero continuity. As usual these actors are just making it up as they go.

That reminds me of Hitler practicing his lines.

That link is pretty tight, as you may know, since part of the story is that Klebold was a big fan of Hitler, and that they staged their event on his birthday on purpose. Yes, Columbine was on April 20, Hitler's birthday. I guess you get the joke now, since you now know he came from these very rich and prominent Jewish lines, including millionaires and rabbis. And I meant Klebold, though Hitler was, too.

Not much information on Klebold's father Thomas, other than that he allegedly ran a mortgage business from his house. No easy way to verify that, is there? So let's search on the Klebolds of Columbus, OH. Sure enough, we find someone of the perfect age to be his father or uncle, Donald Steel Klebold, who died in 2015. Plus we get a suspicious dodge on his Findagrave page, where it says he is survived by his children. Obits usually name them. So we search for the actual obit, which we find at Walker Funeral Home. He has three sons, but none of them named Thomas. So maybe this is his uncle, or Thomas is a middle name. To test that, let's look Thomas up on the people searches. FastPeopleSearch is still up today, and we find him there immediately, age 79, related to Sue, etc. No aka's other than the initial E, so that theory probably fails, but we do hit paydirt, since this site has his old addresses, including one dated July 1999, right after the event. We can then take that address to Google Maps and Zillow. You may be interested to know the Klebold's bought a 10,000sqft house on S. Cougar with 9 baths, recently listed for over $6 million.

This is free public information, so I am not doxxing anyone. The Klebolds are not still there, so don't go bothering those people. The Klebolds now live in a $2 million house nearby according to these records.

We also get an extensive relatives list at FastPeopleSearch for the Klebolds, and it includes Bush, Fisher, Jacobs, Sauers, Hale, Walsh, Balkcom, and Pence, confirming again what I already told you. So they aren't related to Bushes only four generations back, as we saw above. They are still closely related to them. The strange thing is that Thomas is not related to any Klebolds there, indicating a partial scrubbing. So let's click on the oldest person on the page, a Herbert Fisher of Connecticut. Sure enough, he links us to a . . . not Klebold . . . Cohen. You had to see that coming, right? The Cohens of New Haven. One of the most interesting is Lt. Col. Richard Klebold, d. 1994, buried in Doyle Veterans Cemetery, wife a Regan.

There are only 65 Klebolds listed at Findagrave in the entire US, centering on New Jersey and being buried at the Jewish Holy Sepulcher Cemetery in East Orange, and from collating this list we find other quick confirmation they are Jewish, being also Strassburger, Rausch, Wein, Eckert, Baltzer, Beacham (Beauchamp), Musser, Lukin, Rundell (Arundel, from Cornwall), Schutte (Schutzjude), and Driver.

What else can we tease out there? Well, Sue worked for the CDLE, which is the Colorado Department of Labor and Employment. Her title is GPIII. Does that match her page at Wiki? No, since they tell us she worked with the disabled in some Community College. We do find confirmation Thomas was a real estate agent running his own business, licensed agent LLC. Anyone on his list about 45 that could be Dylan? Well, since you ask. Truthfinder lists Thomas' first relative as Byron Jacobs, 47, and MyLife tells us he is aka Byron Jacob Klebold. This is supposed to be Dylan's older brother. Any pics of him? Well, since you ask:

The first one is supposed to be Byron, and the last is them together. So he looks just like Dylan and the pics of them together are garbage. Some will say that first one is also Dylan, but that guy is too old to be 17.

Here's another one:

Yeah, that's a horrible fake. How do I know? Well, it was shot with a flash, which is why the shadows are going directly back. That's what the dark things are on the lower parts of their heads, behind their ears. But for some reason only their heads are casting that shadow, not their bodies. Dylan should be casting a shadow back on Byron, and they both should be casting on the couch. This tells us the heads were pasted on. Even the shadows that are there are wrong, because they are too far from the wall to cast like that. The wall behind those heads was only about six inches back, but they are sitting on that couch, so their heads are a couple of feet from that wall. Then we have the fact that we know both brothers are supposed to have had that reddish hair, not just one of them. Also remember that your hair gets darker as you get older, not lighter. So Byron's face and hair are too dark here, indicating that is not him. Probably isn't either of them. Here's another one:

That's even worse, proving we are in the middle of a fake. Compare the eyes. The baby's eyes are in sharp focus while the boy's eyes are soft, like the rest of the photo. Or compare the hair in the same way. Sharp versus soft. The baby's head has been pasted in. This is just pathetic. Can you say "brother switch"?

That's the one they ran with Sue Klebold's Oprah article. The problem: it's AI. This was 1989, so why is the image so perfect, like it was taken with high-pixel digital? Plus, it doesn't match the one we just saw.

Wow, how much lengthening of the face did he get in just a year or two? Also look closely at the edge of his hair in the first one. Not one stray hair. Must have been some great hairspray he used at age seven! It's an AI cut-out, proving the fraud again.

I don't really need to go, do I? But I will just for fun. I want to fry these people like Sue Klebold, who should be in jail with thousands of others of these crisis actors and fakers.

On November 22, 1998, their friend Robyn Anderson purchased a carbine rifle and the two shotguns for the pair at the Tanner Gun show, as they were too young to legally purchase the guns themselves. After the attack, she told investigators that she had believed the pair wanted the weapons for target shooting and denied that she had prior knowledge of their plans.[11] Anderson was not charged.[\[63\]](#)[\[64\]](#)[\[k\]](#)

Hmmm, November 22, you say. You mean the day of JFK's fake assassination? And why wouldn't she be charged for that? That is highly illegal, whether she knew what they were up to or not. But it appears she did know about the event, since she and her best friend were absent the day of the shooting. We are also expected to believe that Anderson, an 18-year-old girl who looked even younger, was not even asked for ID at the Tanner Gun Show in Adams County. It doesn't work like that and didn't in 1999. My guess is the guns were supplied by the CIA and were just for show afterwards.

They allegedly brought six propane tank bombs to school in their cars that morning and somehow hid them in the cafeteria. They didn't go off, but ask yourself how you could get big bombs like that into the cafeteria without being noticed? When did they do this? During a bathroom break during homeroom?

On Tuesday morning, April 20, 1999, Harris and Klebold placed two duffel bags in the cafeteria. Each bag contained propane bombs, set to detonate during the "A" lunch shift, which began at 11:15 am[\[n\]](#)

No witness recalled seeing the duffel bags being added to the 400 or so backpacks that were already in the cafeteria.[\[93\]](#) The security staff at CHS did not observe the bags being placed in the cafeteria; a custodian was replacing the school security videotape at around 11:14 am.[\[94\]](#)

You really have to be kidding me. And people bought this story? None of this makes a lick of sense. Why were there backpacks in the cafeteria? Did you leave your backpacks in big piles in the cafeteria all day, where anyone could steal them? And if you had left backpacks anywhere, were any of those backpacks huge duffelbags that could hold propane tanks? No. And that part about a custodian changing security tapes at 11:15, one minute before A lunch, is a groaner. It jumps off the page like a kangaroo walking over a bunsen burner. Notice that by saying that, they admit this video security existed, but don't then explain how that would prevent security from seeing the boys plant the duffels. To prevent something like this you need real-time security, meaning you have a guy in room watching the videos as they happen. Making tapes allows for prosecution later, but it can't stop crimes in real time. But this diverts you into thinking something is being explained here, when it isn't. The question is, how and when did the boys get into the cafeteria when it wasn't lunch time? Before school? Did your highschool let people wander into the cafeteria before school with giant duffel bags for no reason? Mine didn't. The cafeteria was locked when it wasn't in use. And where did they build all these tank bombs and pipe bombs? In metal shop? In the basement at home, while Mom was in the kitchen with Colonel Mustard? We are told Harris's military Dad caught him with a pipe bomb, but did nothing about it. Just laughed it off, I guess. Chip off the old block, you know.

Some Internet users claim the bomb placement can be seen on the surveillance video at around 10:58 am.[\[97\]](#)

So the boys were just wandering the halls during third period with huge duffelbags large enough to carry propane tanks, and the lunch staff watched them walk into the cafeteria and plant these bags in strategic places? Good to know.

A total of 188 rounds of ammunition were fired by the perpetrators during the massacre:[\[90\]](#)[\[91\]](#)

Aces and eights, of course.

The first student shot was Rachel Scott:

Seriously? That's the photo they publish on her Wikipedia page. Anyone can tell that is a fake.

Her body was left outside and was not retrieved until the following morning.

Really? Why? No reason, it just seems scary.

Her bio also makes no sense, since although she has been sold as a devout Christian, we find this on her Wiki page;

When Scott was 11 in March 1993, she visited the church that her aunt and uncle attended in Shreveport, Louisiana, and chose to convert to Christianity.[\[13\]](#)

Converted to Christianity from what? Can only be Judaism, right? But her father was allegedly a pastor, so how could she have been a Jew prior to 1993? Her mother married a pastor but raised her children Jewish? So let's look him up at FastPeopleSearch. His only business is Rachel's Challenge, making money off his allegedly dead daughter. His wife Beth Nimmo is nee Cecrle, which appears to be Jewish, and they are indeed related to Gould, seeming to confirm that. Cecrle comes from Bohemia, which is famous for its old Jewish populations. In the US, these Cecrles come from Nebraska, where they are also Zoubeks—a Jewish name. Also related to Horowitz, Phillips, and Plummer. However, the Gould appears to be related to the Scotts, not the Cecrles, so I can't make heads or tails of this. My guess is that everyone involved in this is Jewish, and we have already seen that admitted with Klebold. So this Christian conversion sounds like the usual feint. I am not buying it anymore than that picture of her. But you may remember she was sold as a Christian martyr, with Harris killing her because she was a Christian. That has now been walked back as well, with a witness to their conversation (Castaldo) recanting his testimony. Same thing for the Christian story of victim Bernall, with witness Wyant blowing it up. So again, the entire original story has completely fallen apart, though you have to dig like this to find it out. Which nobody does.

That's victim Anne Marie Hochhalter, whose mother Carla, who had been suffering from depression and mental health issues previously, shot and killed herself in a pawn shop after asking to see a revolver.[\[4\]\[1\]](#)

Yeah. So pawn shops sell loaded guns in Littleton, do they? “Hi, I know I look like hell and seem really spaced out, but I really like this pretty gun, could you load it for me so I can fire a few shots into the wall?” “Sure, lady, no problem, anything for a sale”.

It has been alleged that Harris and Klebold were once both confronted by a group of students at CHS who sprayed them with ketchup while referring to them as "faggots" and "queers". Klebold told his mother it had been the worst day of his life. [\[236\]](#) According to Brown, "That happened while teachers watched. They couldn't fight back. They wore the ketchup all day and went home covered with it." According to classmate Chad Laughlin, it involved seniors pelting Klebold with "ketchup-covered tampons" in the commons.

If you believe that you need immediate brain surgery.

Wikipedia has a section on conspiracy theories for this event, but it is very short, most of it about Falwell and Phelps claiming the boys were gay. They admit Alex Jones has called it “a 100% false flag”. So why wasn't he sued for a trillion by victims' parents? We aren't sure, other than that there aren't any victims or victims' parents, though that didn't stop them for faking Jones' Sandy Hook trials. At any rate, Wikipedia has nothing to say against any conspiracy theories, simply giving them one sentence reports with no effort at rebuttal. They certainly don't nip in the bud anything I have reported here, and how could they since they gifted me most of this evidence themselves. I hardly had to leave their pages. This fraud falls apart at a glance from someone like me and doesn't even require deep research. I destroyed it in a single day. I could go on for many more hours, but it isn't really worth it. Those photos should have destroyed it by themselves.

*Kass added an author's note to the second edition of his book, where he claims Dean Inouye at the Boston Globe called him ten minutes after shooting started at Columbine. Sounds like inside information to me, boss. I am just surprised Kass wasn't there before the event started, and he probably was.
