

The Latest Fake Trial

Could that photo above look any more staged? All they need is the theme from Ghostbusters.

Today it is being reported that FoxNews settled with Dominion, agreeing to pay almost $800 million AND admitting it lied. Which is all you need to know to know it was faked.

This is legal news for the legally impaired. Settlements don't work like this. You settle so that you don't have to admit guilt. Remember all those other cases you have read about in the news, where one side agreed to settle, and they say "all terms of the settlement are private. Party X admits no guilt".

So you should be asking what Fox got in this "settlement". You will say it avoided going to court, but Fox would have wanted to avoid going to court why? To avoid having to pay a huge settlement and to avoid admitting it was wrong. But now we are supposed to believe it did both. Doesn't fit the definition of a settlement, does it? It fits the definition of fake news, managed by both sides here to make Dominion look innocent, give legitimacy to a voting system no one believes in anymore, and scare everyone else off from criticizing Dominion.

As with the Jim Fetzer and Alex Jones trials on Sandy Hook, this is supposed to scare private researchers off from posting their findings. It is aimed, in part, directly at people like me. I am supposed to be bluffed by this fake court case from attacking Dominion or any other of the big dogs, due to fear I will be raked over the coals by some slanted judge and have to pay millions in court costs, legal fees, and judgments. Unfortunately that isn't working for them in my case, since I have no assets and am not bluffable anyway. I know all these court cases are fake, so they don't scare me. They shouldn't scare you either. You should still feel free to say whatever you like. The First Amendment is still in effect in all real courts. The Constitution has not been overturned or sunsetted.

So why, you may ask, would Fox and Murdoch agree to a fake settlement here? It seems all bad for them. Except you are forgetting this is fake, so Fox isn't actually paying anyone anything. They are just saying they are: not the same thing. How do I know they aren't paying? Well, let me flip that: how do you know they are? Do you have access to the bank accounts of Fox or Dominion? No, you are just taking their word for it. Why would you do that? After all that you know, why would you believe Fox, Dominion, or the news? They have lied to you millions of times about every last thing, so why are you still biting on these fake court cases?

But the answer to the first question is, Fox and Murdoch agreed to this because they were ordered to. This is a national security issue, since, as I said, the integrity of the voting system and of the election outcomes depends on you believing elections are fair and that entities like Dominion are not rigging the whole thing. So from the point of view of the US Government, Dominion HAD to win this. There was no chance Dominion would be allowed to lose this, in any scenario, because that would be to admit elections were being rigged. If elections are being rigged, our entire system is a fraud, from the ground up.

However, no matter the outcome of this fake trial, almost everyone already knows that elections are being rigged by computers, and in other ways. It is common knowledge on both sides of the aisle. Big polls admitted it after the 2020 election, when a sizable percentage of Dems responded that they too thought the election had been stolen, even though it was stolen in their favor. You would have to be a complete moron to believe elections are free of nefarious interference. Many people have gone to jail for election tampering, and that number rises every year. So to claim, as places like CNN do, that elections are all above board, is just fantasy. Nobody believes it, not even their own viewers. Not even their own anchors.

Which is why this fake settlement with Fox won't make any difference. The only ones crowing about it are the talking heads on TV, but no one believes those bozos regardless. Not only is the trust in elections gone, the trust in news is even more gone. No real person is going to read this headline and go, "Oh, that's good, Dominion must be totally honest." Just as no sane person trusts Monsanto, Meta, Google, the WEF, WHO, or the CDC, no sane person trust Dominion. These big companies are past the point where they can fool us into trusting them by faking some big court case.
