

The Strait of Hormuz

Before we get started, I need to ask for some assistance. If you live near Western Virginia, I need someone to check out a house rental for me near Christiansburg. Drop me a line if you can do it. milesmathis@protonmail.com

We are being told Iran has closed the Strait of Hormuz, causing a huge spike in oil prices, and fertilizer and drug shortages causing food and drug price spikes as well. That link is to Infowars, but the same story is everywhere. While at the same time Trump is saying on TV that “they have no navy”. So here's a question for you: how can Iran close the Strait with no navy?

The Strait isn't even controlled by Iran and never was, it is controlled via the south shore by Saudi Arabia, UAE, and Oman, all big US allies. In other words, it is controlled by the US. But even if Iran had been controlling it before this war, we are told the US is winning in a rollover, with our huge aircraft carriers parked in the Persian Gulf. The US and its allies have 19 aircraft carriers (with 11 of those US and allegedly nuclear) and Iran has . . . zero. So tell me again how Iran has closed the Strait?

Oh yeah, now I remember: a single Irani soldier dressed himself as an American female midshipman, snuck on board one carrier, and flushed a dead squirrel down the toilet or something, disabling the entire ship. There was a computer room on the wall opposite the row of toilets, I guess, and that went down with the squirrel, and since all the ships are connected, the entire fleet went dark. That explains the closure of the Strait of Hormuz, right? That explains your gas, food, and drug prices doubling overnight—after already doubling during Covid.

This is all just another Phoenician Navy shakedown. Due to worldwide pushback in the past five years, they have lost trillions, so this is their plan for making it up. The AI fraud hit the wall last year, so this is their plan for making it up. Fake a war, fake shortages, and soak you one more time.

But it isn't just this event. Notice how they run these things, since it is how they fool you everytime. They hire thousands of talking heads on both sides of the aisle to frame this as whether or not Iran will open the Strait and a dozen other side topics, so you forget to ask whether Iran has any control of the Strait to start with, or ever did. It's called misdirection. They are doing the same thing with the event I covered yesterday, of the 175 schoolgirls triple bombed by our Air Force. On my way to the market today I heard some Jewish bozo faux-historian from the Cardozo School (Yeshiva University in NY, of course) being interviewed on NPR, arguing this was a war crime whether or not it was accidental, and comparing Trump to the Nazis, and on and on blahblahblah, and we hear from the other side claiming all is fair in love and war, power is everything, blahblahblah, so again you forget to ask whether this happened at all. Everyone on both sides takes it as given and goes from there. This is logical fallacy #1, a sort of argument for idiots, but since almost no one knows what a logical fallacy is anymore, and is too drugged up to think rationally anyway, it doesn't matter.

Almost every topic is framed like this now, and has been for many decades, because it works. You are pushed into arguing details, so the fact the whole thing is a conjob is immediately bypassed. Not one person (who makes the news on either side, in any country) ever says, "Wait, slow down, we don't have any evidence this even happened, other than a press release from the Pentagon or the CIA or one of their mouthpieces—which we have caught lying millions of times and who have an obvious stake in lying here—so why don't we look at it logically for a few moments before we rush ahead into responses? Having a partisan debate on this makes no sense if it never happened, and given the track record of these people, we should just assume it didn't. No debate is necessary. Any and all debate looks manufactured, so picking a side is just busywork.

Not only is this war being used to justify our trillion-dollar defense budget, including the B2 bomber and all the other hardware, and being used to further inflate the prices of everything, it has the added benefit of adding to your levels of dread, since both sides are framing it as the beginning of WWII, possible nuclear war, endtimes, and a rise in terrorism. This keeps you hiding under the bed in the fully prone position, from which posture you are very unlikely to question anything you are told from the TV or phone. You are very unlikely to act logically when your mouth is full of dust bunnies and your eyes are clogged with dog hair. So the Revolution is permanently stalled.

April 3: the White House has now gone completely off the deep end, with Trump claiming we are now in a war economy and requesting $1.5 trillion for defense instead of $1 trillion. A 50% increase to fight a country with no Navy or Air Force, that we are already allegedly bombing into the stone age? This from a President who ran on the platform of getting us out of foreign wars and concentrating on domestic stability and programs. To pay for this extra $500 billion, he suggests we dump Medicare and Medicaid, letting the States take that over. What? Seems to me the Phoenicians have all gone insane and are just begging you to revolt, to put them out of their misery.
