

ALEX JONES takes early retirement but he will be back

First published November 14, 2023

[Update next day: Wow, that was fast, he's back already. Gone only one day. A judge has already ruled the sale was illegal and we are told the new AG Gaetz is going to look into it. That's convenient. Just another joke on top of all the others. If the AG does look into it, don't expect them to admit or imply Sandy Hook was fake. But who knows, they may drop some breadcrumbs for fun.]

I woke up this afternoon to find Infowars gone. A quick search told me The Onion bought it at auction, despite not being the high bidder. So this is just the continuation of a joke. One CIA front fake-purchases a second one.

How do I know this is a fake? Well, start here, where I told you what this was about. I have been blowing the cover of this since October of 2021. All the trials were staged in dummy courts, with no jury or a scarecrow jury making no decisions. Just sitting there looking stupid.

Plus, we can go back even further. I knew this was all faked because Sandy Hook was faked. I published four papers on that starting in January of 2013 and they are still up. Have been all along. The fake Jones' trials were just run to scare people like me into silence and into removing any analysis they had posted on the web. Didn't work in my case.

Next way I knew is that Jones hasn't looked like he is under any stress over the past months. He is tan and flush and on a diet, slimming down now that he has more time to chase the ladies, I guess. He was on the air shirtless just two days ago, yukking it up with Steven Crowder. He has been in a great mood, so that makes no sense. The timing is also a big clue, since he retired right after the big Trump victory. A little too pat.

The next way I know is that The Onion purchase makes no sense. Infowars isn't worth anything to The Onion or anyone else. We are told they are going to turn it into a parody of Infowars, but no one is going to watch that. Nor is anyone going to buy vitamins or anything else from a parody site, so there is no potential profit there. That would attract about three advertisers to start with, and they would all abandon it after two months. So The Onion is just throwing its money in the street here. Except that the purchase is just a decoy. They didn't pay the Sandy Hook parents anything, since in my opinion there are no Sandy Hook parents.

A website is a potential asset only in the case that the buyer continues attracting the same audience and advertisers, you know. The URL is worth nothing on its own. The name is worth nothing on its own. Without Jones and his crew, the website is worthless.

But I predict Jones won't last long in retirement. He has defined himself in his own mind as an on-air talker, and without that he would dry up and blow away. He loves doing that so much he almost never took vacations, so how is he going to survive in retirement? I don't think he will last six months. Owen Shroyer and the other guys will quickly rebuild, since there is nothing stopping them. And there is nothing stopping Jones from rejoining them whenever he feels like it. The First Amendment was not just repealed, you know.

Which reminds me of that. Another way I know this is all fake is that the “judge” in the Jones trials banned Jones and his fake attorneys from mentioning the First Amendment in her “court”. That is strictly equivalent to a judge banning any mention of the law in her court. Yeah, CLOWN WORLD.

[And now, we have further evidence this is all vaudeville, since I don't think I have ever seen a judge reverse a bankruptcy auction after it has already occurred. Not just CLOWN WORLD but TWILIGHT ZONE. How could Jones even get this before a new judge in less than 24 hours? And if it was the old judge, he would have had to sign off on the sale to start with. So we are supposed to believe he signed off on it and then reversed himself 24 hours later? This only happens on the stage. In the same way, Jones is claiming a criminal investigation has already begun. By whom? Can't be Gaetz, since Gaetz isn't AG yet. How does a criminal investigation begin within 24 hours? The judge can't investigate, since he is a judge, not a prosecutor. He would have to refer this to someone, but we aren't told to whom. Regardless, it couldn't happen overnight.

Then there is this quote:

During his live transmission Friday, Alex Jones explained the Sandy Hook families pledged the money he owes them as part of the sale without other bidders knowing credit could be used in the auction.

If you can make sense of that, you have been on the ventilator too long. It doesn't work like that. The Sandy Hook families owned Infowars before the auction, and they were auctioning it to turn it into cash, right? So they can't pledge money from the sale before the sale. In that case they would be buying Infowars from themselves. The whole thing has gone circular.

What is most amazing to me is all the major parties now involved in this fraud/theater, including Ben Collins, John Feinblatt, Good Morning America, Roger Stone, Jeffrey Clark, and many others. Just proves once again that the reach of the Intel agencies is infinite and that they now control almost everything. All to continue to try to convince you Sandy Hook was real and to warn you off saying you don't believe that.]
