

Dear Brown Sahib: Dazed and Confused?

A wake up call for Indians

by an Anon Indian

Lord and Lady Mountbatten – with Nehru

I got into this paper by looking into Kash (Cash?) Patel, the newest joker with an Indian background to be foisted upon the public. That soon led me to a larger thesis: the tendency of the Indian to become the Brown Sahib. The Brown Sahib was infamous during the British rule in India since he was, among other things, the intermediary between the British boss and the Indian servant staff, who enjoyed the semi-privileges of being the boss while the master is away or is not looking. Often these Indian sahibs were the very worst of the community, as they had sold out their own morals (take a look at Nehru's face above) in order to enable the oppression of their neighbors.

But then I remembered that Miles had recently outed B. R. Ambedkar, and Gandhi was already outed, and another bunch of tech puppets have been outed in another paper. So I thought to myself, why not do a clean sweep and finish up with another old stalwart – Nehru (note that Modi has been outed elsewhere) – and clarify the status of India in the modern world? Ambitious, I know, but what the heck – let's dive in.

First let's quickly tackle Patel – scion of the wealthy Patel families of India – whose senior-year thesis was based on this: "Racism is man's gravest threat—the maximum of hatred for a minimum reason", by

Jewish theologian Abraham Joshua Heschel. Off to a great start, wasn't he? How many high schoolers do you know who care about Jewish theologians?

And then he grew up, only to look like this:

Booyah!

You have all been advised by Miles to study faces carefully – and that advice turns out to be very handy here. What do you see? Do you see someone who is even aware of himself? Those eyes scream “possessed” to me more than anything else, sort of like Alex Jones on a rant or that creature Stew Peters, on whose show Patel appeared 8 times by the way. Hmm. And, already in high school, Patel was a member of the Future Business Leaders of America \(FBLA\). What is FBLA? Well, according to their own website, they are partners with the CIA:

So that didn't take long. This guy was tapped quite early, and groomed as well – hence that cute cover story of him being a caddy at the Garden City Country Club – as it always happens, of course.

The Patel clan has been up to no good even during the time of the Indian “independence” – which we will tackle next.

Independence Day

India was supposedly granted its independence on August 15, 1947. All of Miles' readers know about 1947—year one of the old CIA—but it turns out there is something interesting about the date August 15th as well. It is the date of the founding of the Jesuit Order in 1534. And it was also the date that Japan surrendered after World War II. Oh, and Woodstock '69 started on this date. And Lord Mountbatten – the Governor General of India shown in the first pic – picked that date specifically to commemorate the Japanese surrender:

Throughout the rest of his life, Mountbatten gave a variety of explanations for choosing 15 August. In later years, he liked to romanticize his decision as yet another flash of inspiration, another Mountbatten hunch. He told Larry Collins and Dominique Lapierre in a recorded interview: 'The date I chose came out of the blue . . . I was determined to show that I was master of the whole event. When they asked: had we set a date, I knew it had to be soon. I hadn't worked it out exactly then – I thought it had to be about August or September and I then went to the 15th of August. Why? Because it was the second anniversary of Japan's surrender.'² It was also, as he told others, the anniversary of his own appointment as supreme commander, so his choice seems perfectly in character.

In fact there is evidence that the date had been carefully thought out in advance. Mountbatten had written to Listowel the day before the press conference, saying that he wanted to wind up the Raj on 15 August. And he said elsewhere that he had agreed the date with the Indian leaders at the beginning of June. There is no written record of this, but it is interesting that it happens to coincide almost exactly with Patel's demand for independence in two months – that, after all, had been the deal. 'The August transfer of power,' Mountbatten

Did you catch that? The date was chosen to signify a victory of the Anglo Empire and the defeat of Japan, and yet it is foisted upon India as "Independence Day"? You would think it ought to be called the Day of Defeat for India too, wouldn't you? That was indeed what happened with the Patel mentioned above, Sardar Patel. Patel had earlier already helped our dear apostle of nonviolence (Gandhi) in a recruitment drive for World War I – sending Indians to fight, kill and die in Europe. And now, he went on a rampage against all the Indian kings of the time to subjugate them to the Government of India in time for the so-called independence. This was the completion of the changing of the guard from the older Empires to the newer Economic Aristocracy that had already taken place in Europe. What the British began, Patel finished. He did this with the help of V K Menon. And who is Menon? Straight from wiki:

While studying in the Madras Law College, he was involved in Theosophy and was associated with Annie Besant and the Home Rule Movement. He was a member of the "Brothers of Service", founded by Annie Besant who helped him travel to England in 1924. Menon studied at London School of Economics, securing Bachelor of Science in economics and Master of Science in economics from University of London.

There you go, a serial set of red flags, and another stooge of the London School of Economics. We came across the Webbs and LSE earlier with Ambedkar (and a host of others). Ambedkar, V K Menon, and then the third leg of this little stool: Jawaharlal Nehru, the first Prime Minister of India.

Menon and Nehru – The Goodfellas

Nehru was intimately tied to the Fabian Society (the wolf-in-sheep's-clothing people) and also studied law at the Inner Temple, just like Gandhi. Or did he? This wonderful genuine bona-fide photo should tell you what to think of that:

Nehru also got himself entangled with Mountbatten's ostensible wife Edwina (see the first pic, again), while Mountbatten was a known homosexual and she was his beard. Edwina was the granddaughter of a Jewish banker (Ernest Cassel, the financier of Edward VII), just so you know. So now we have most of the key pied-pipers of post-1947 India: Ambedkar, Gandhi, Menon, Nehru all coming out of a spook's nest – and at the center of it is another Jewish leader and Marxist Harold Laski. His wife Frida was a eugenicist as well, so yay. Harold Laski was super-influential on the first battalion of Indian politicians, (see also the Gandhi paper):

Nehru was greatly influenced by European traditions of social democracy, so much so that one unnamed wit once remarked that in every Indian cabinet meeting of the 1950s there was a chair reserved for the ghost of Professor Harold Laski, the British political theorist.

Laski (looking suspiciously like Hitler's geeky cousin)

Laski got Menon thinking that he was “warning Indians not to trade British rule simply for rule by wealthy Indians”. And Harold Laski was the son of the wealthy cotton merchant, Nathan Laski. Hah! You know what that means. True to the script, this is Marx 2.0 all over again, Indian edition. Someone probably sent out the orders: Those Indians will be raging against the plunder of the British Empire, send them some anti-capitalist Antis, quick! And Laski was supplied. Another Laski student was Pierre Trudeau, Justin Trudeau's father, so you know that Laski was a supply center to the British Empire. The entire charade of independence was hence nothing but a shifting of offices – you just create an Indian outpost of the British Empire, and pull back the British officers. There is no need to keep them there, as the Indians themselves are being the ‘Brown Sahib’ and doing the dirty work. Why get up and walk to the TV when you can use a remote control? It has openly been admitted:

“London School of Economics has always had a strong India link. Professor Laski”, Singh commented, “had a great many followers even among our political leaders at the time. Many of his students, like P.N. Haksar and our former President K.R. Narayanan, had distinguished careers in our government. Often their appointment to government service was based on a mere note of recommendation from Professor Laski to Jawaharlal Nehru!”

Boom. If that isn't proof of the remote control, I don't know what is. It is easy to keep people squabbling about who the right leader was – Nehru, Gandhi, Patel – while this remote control was in action and the country was being robbed blind. These “leaders” watched it happen as the Empire was torn apart into ~~Absurdistan~~ East Pakistan and West Pakistan along religious lines (which just so happened to link with shipping lines in the Bay of Bengal and Arabian Sea) while the common man paid the price. The Indian subcontinent was on the chopping block as early as 1918 – so the leaders were completely irrelevant as usual.

The relation between England and India has, in the 21st century (after all the shuffling offices) been transformed to that between the US and India. Thus began the rise of the Annexation 2.0 and brain drain.

The Second Annexation

What did Indians do while the Laskian/Fabian policies were choking them for decades? Well, they fled the country, to other English speaking places, predominantly England and US. Once the fall of the Soviet Union was orchestrated, it was time to swing the pendulum the other way and the IMF threatened to recall all the loans given to India unless they devalued the rupee and opened the door to “capital investment”. You know what that means.

But those who stayed back in India were led to play second fiddle to the gigantic telecom and IT financial interests of the 80’s and 90’s, and a key example for this is Narayana Murthy.

With his good pal Klaus Schwab

This guy was awarded with lucrative outsourcing contracts for squeezing Indian low-cost labor for the Big Tech waves – and lo and behold we have a power player: Brown Sahib 2.0. Murthy is the father-in-law of the recent UK Prime Minister Rishi Sunak, and also:

... he co-chaired the World Economic Forum in Davos, Switzerland... Murthy is an independent director on the corporate board of HSBC and has been a director on the boards of DBS Bank, Unilever, ICICI and NDTV.^{[11][34]} He is also a member of the advisory boards and councils of several educational and philanthropic institutions,^{[11][34]} including Cornell University, INSEAD, ESSEC, Ford Foundation, the UN Foundation...

Call that a red tent, if you want. Red flags piled up into a giant point. Another feather in his cap was that his wife Sudha Murthy has been shilling for vaccines big time, especially during the covid madness, leading to more devastation.

While this was happening in India, droves of Indians were leaving the country heading to the Tech sector and Medical sector in the West. Hence, Big Pharma and Big Surveillance Tech got a big boost from this battalion of minions, and neither can work without them at this point. If the Indian doctors or tech workers in the US and Australia had gone on strike over the covid vaccine or for being asked to build ever more intrusive surveillance tech, the Phoenician project would have had a MAJOR blockage. But rarely has anyone from the Indian community raised a whimper of protest for the job. When I was on the streets protesting with the small crowds against the jab, I rarely saw a single Indian. All of them dutifully accepted to poke themselves and their families. Being the good Sahibs that they are, they did not say a word against the master, and on the contrary supported the genocide. The tech sector further fueled the fire, and ended up being the most despicable example of kowtowing to power the world has ever seen.

So we have a culture that originally had the wisdom of reincarnation, and could see past all the materialistic bullshit, but now falls prey to it. I think the main reason for that is India never truly acquainted itself with the cultural value of Europe. In the first place, by miscalculating the Ages of Mankind, they have convinced themselves that they are in a Dark Age (Kali Yuga) that will last for 426,874 years. What's the point of doing anything, right, when you are in an endless Dark Age? You can call this the Indian Hopelessness PsyOp.

Secondly, being English speaking, they skipped over Europe and went to UK or North America, and never truly imbibed the art of the Renaissance, the literature of Europe, or its real Christian core. They never understood that the value of the free individual was in his inner courage. This fundamental concept is something that Europe built through social convulsions over the centuries and that cannot be absorbed intellectually by an outsider. As a result of the purely-other-worldly orientation (escape from the rebirth cycle etc.) of their religious culture, Indians developed a big Achilles heel for the monetary temptations of this world. And they ended up making the Faustian deal with the devil, and are hence usually well paid.

This deal shows itself very clearly in the US in the behavior of Indians at their jobs, which is where the travesty really begins. In spite of high pay, Indians are ever ready to suck up all criticism, cater to bosses, work long hours, and kowtow continuously to the power structure, as the power structure knows that they have Indians under their thumb. Plus it is very easy for an American to cow an Indian into submission (pun intended) due to the Visa situation. Thousands upon thousands of Indians are stuck in an intellectual indentured servitude called the H1B visa/green card line. Like the poor workers in Dubai whose passports are taken away as soon as they move there, Indians have the ignominy of being a nation of “smart” people being made to wait in the green card line for decades while the employer has full control of their life via the H1B visa. This means the US government controls the money, and hence the very existence of the Indian’s family in the US. Since Indians have come to the US mainly for money and comfort, when you hit their pocketbooks they become immediately docile. The new wealth becomes golden handcuffs.

Hence the Brown Sahib 2.0.

The process continues in the 21st century. Battalions of Indians slog away to build the virtual world for Military Intelligence interests (see this for example). They have sold themselves on the idea that tech is going to solve all problems. And this, in spite of that fact that they might have come from extremely low tech environments in their hometowns, and know that no tech can replace basic human interaction. They should know better!

Even their education is geared towards this:

An educational tradition that spans learning by heart and exalting excellence in higher mathematics is just right for software. It fits the mentality of computers.

The Indian genius: What makes Indian software developers the best in the world?

But there is a severe price to pay for this abandonment of having any true life purpose and catering to the lucrative jobs abroad. Indians lose their soul in the bargain – the guts, courage, backbone, and actual gumption of living lives with head held high in doing something honorable and valuable. As a result of losing their soul, Indians abroad are completely lost. Apart from the ludicrous spelling bee nonsense, they have no cultural contributions abroad – no genuine art or science or even helpful tech to offer. Like an armadillo wrapping itself up, they wrap themselves in an Indian social time-capsule which is a miniature India wherever they go.

When the promptings of their conscience gets too strong and is not assuaged by simply sending money home, they seek solace in funding hundreds of millions of dollars for the construction of temples, or pour enormous amounts of funds into building up the Hindu nationalist party (BJP) back in India, and sing the glories of Modi. Or they try to drown out this conscience by continuing to denounce India even more vociferously. These wannabes denounce India as a “third world” place, “corrupt” “bad sanitation”, “crowded” etc. They fail to see that the entire world is under the chokehold of the plunderers. They celebrate green cards and other miscellaneous milestones, which are obvious jokes and should be absolutely humiliating to even think of “celebrating”. They take up another citizenship, and throw a party to celebrate it. It is like the celebration of a slave whose master allows him to enter another room in the house.

This spinelessness has underlined by Hollywood which continues to depict Indians in such a servile status over and over again in films and TV. Conspiracy theorists get blackwashed, but Indians usually get subdued. See these examples from Billions and Big Bang Theory:

Raj: I've reconsidered your offer to let me work with you.

Sheldon: For me.

Raj: Yes, for you. I do, however, have a few conditions. First, at all times, I am to be treated as a colleague and an equal. Second, my contributions shall be noted in all published material. And third, you are never allowed to lecture me on Hinduism or my Indian culture.

Sheldon: I'm impressed, Raj. Those are very cogent and reasonable conditions.

Raj: Thank you.

Sheldon: I reject them all.

Raj: Then you leave me no choice. I accept the job.

Indians don't know what they are doing in the West any more, if they ever did. All the cool tech in the world doesn't assuage the gnawing hole they feel inside, especially when they see the kind of society around them with Men-Are-Pigs, Women-are-Pigs, Project Chaos in a hundred ways. They shudder at the LGBTQ madness, the excessive gaming and the shattering of families around them. But they don't have the guts to go against any of that, because that would undermine their whole point of immigrating to America/Canada/Australia etc., wouldn't it?

And then there is Yoga. What was originally simply a posture for meditation was repackaged with Scandinavian exercises at the end of the 19th century as "Ancient Yoga going back millennia" and boy did the Western world fall for it – probably boosted by the same networks that unleashed a flood of "Ananda-gurus" to conk out the rational mind as part of the counterculture project. And let's not forget the [ISKCON project.] Peace and happiness, my foot. Try outrage, as Miles suggests, instead. The end result is, this is what passes for Yoga nowadays:

Indians ought to have figured out these projects and warned their Western counterparts of this nonsense. This is just my attempt at such a warning, trying to make up for it, as all I see instead is the suckering of more people with a splash, Bikram Yoga style (need to unwind that spook another day).

What would it look like if Indians could regain their souls? The further back you go into Indian culture, the more you notice the tradition of rishis who developed the skills of inner development. Which means that Indians have a knack for valuing things not visible to the eye. They can actually value the importance of community, the freshness in the preparation of healthy food, the value of festivals for a community, the value of family and human relationships, the value of a healthy human spirit, and the connection to the higher world (or the Muses, if you will). The problem is that all this has been diverted into the Indian cocoon instead of pouring it out into the world. Only the Yoga and “peace-happiness” gunk is allowed for the West.

Indians seem not realize that they have many positive things to offer the American society, instead of just being a tech-slave or a navel-gazer-guru. They make the best diplomats and relationship builders. They can offer advice on matters of mental health, on cooperation, and on seeing things from multiple directions as regards the world of the soul. If Indians did their job well, American society need not have the addiction to pills and psychotherapists. If the Indians offered their expertise well, bringing up kids would be a much better process, as the Western world really sucks at it nowadays thanks to Operation Chaos. Most Americans have lost any conception of what childhood and adulthood really are and how they are distinguished (Miles has tackled this repeatedly). American society would not have gotten into schizophrenic extremes where even the most minor corporal punishment can jail the parents, while at the same time obsessing over bullying in school. Indians could call out the insanity of reducing all romantic relationships to the sexual via the hookup culture.

Indians could have easily called out this hypocrisy of child-rearing in public, as they have a natural instinct for it. They need to develop it further instead of suppressing it to be a better Sahib. Indians also have a capacity to get to the heart of things while speaking, due to the advantage of the down-to-earth languages they grow up with, rather than using the innumerable euphemisms and acronyms that pervade the English language. This gives them a unique capacity to use English in a totally different way, all of which are missed opportunities for real contributions. They can prevent Americans from falling into the pit of hardcore materialism and atheism, without making a mush of the mind via the sex-drugs-rock'n'roll route. Instead of pouring millions and billions into temples, they can set up better independent school systems that don't shove tech down the kids' throats and turn them into zombies. The proper Indian model would beat the elite private school model or the public school model any day. If anyone can set up a tech-free school, the Indians can, if they set their mind to it. They already have the money: they don't have to feed the beast with it.

But all that won't happen unless they break the golden handcuffs and get out of their own little "mini-India". You need to have some self-confidence to pick up these things, after all. We need all the help we can get to resist the psyops and create healthy alternatives. It might cost you in goods, but at the end of the day it is a fight for your soul and the soul of the world.
