The Kathleen Peterson Murder was Faked

by Miles Mathis

November 16, 2026 Just my opinion as usual, come to by compiling the mainstream evidence I give you below

Note the black cat at the bottom of the stairs there, above the blood (moulage or pig's blood) on the wall. All part of the theater.

Not to be confused with the Scott and Laci Peterson fake, another Men-are-Pigs event which I have already hit.

OK, just tripped across another fake Men-are-Pigs case. They are endless. I got into it like this: I was testing my own links out of my recent Russell Brand paper, one of them being to the Glen Ridge fake from 1989. I need to toplist that one as well. Anyway, at the bottom of that paper I mention the fake Duke Lacrosse rapes, so I went to Wikipedia to see the updates on that case there. One thing I hadn't pursued was the prosecutor Nifong, later disbarred for his actions. And on his page I learned he had previously worked on the Michael Peterson case, suggesting to me that might be fake as well.

As it turns out, it was, since this case is covered in red flags, being an obvious Men-are-Pigs fabrication to further destroy men and the heterosexual relationship. We will get to proof of that.

But first, I just saw that plays into today's news, where we find a leading story being the Maryland schoolteacher who has called for aborting all male babies, to save us from the Patriarchy and violence against women. So this is what the project has brought women to. As it was designed to. And I have to admit, if I were a woman and I believed all the mainstream stories of rape and violence, I might possibly feel the same way on my worst days. But I don't. I have fully researched them and can tell you none of it is true. It was all manufactured by worldwide Intelligence to split us: for population control, to boost consumerism (split people buy more things they don't need), and to promote factionalism and civil war. If we are hating and fighting eachother, we aren't such a bother to them. It is the best way to avoid revolution.

We will start with Michael Nifong, who became DA of Durham County, NC, in a very strange way just a few months before the Duke Lacrosse fake event. Governor Mike Easley appointed Nifong to replace DA Jim Hardin, whom Easley had elevated to Superior Court judge. The event at Duke was March 2006, and Nifong was running for DA at that time. He would win the election in November by just 833 votes, and be charged with ethics violations in January, 2007. He would be disbarred that June. He was convicted of criminal contempt of court, but served only one day in jail. The three Jewish boys at Duke allegedly sued him, but he paid only $1000 in the settlement. Doesn't sound very believable, does it? Crystal Mangum, the accuser, was not charged for her false testimony, though they knew it was false by January, 2007. Nifong also knew it was false, which means he was prosecuting this fake case at the behest of someone. Had to be CIA, DHS, or some similar entity. Which means Nifong was a CIA asset.

Before we move on to the Peterson case, I remind you the Duke Lacrosse case was not only about splitting the sexes, it was about fomenting race wars. The girl was black and the boys were white, so the fake event did double duty.

Nifong said in a court hearing on October 27, six months after the arrest of Seligmann, Finnerty, and Evans, that he had not yet interviewed the alleged victim. "I haven't talked with her about the facts of that night...We're not at that stage yet." According to Nifong, none of his assistants had discussed the case with her, either. [14]

So prosecution had not talked to the victim in six months, but somehow knew enough about the case to give above 70 interviews in national and international news, assuming the guilt of the accused and stirring up emotions as much as humanly possible?

You also may not know this: Crystal Mangum, who they sell as a stripper in the first sentence on the case at Wikipedia, was actually Navy, and was trained to operate radios and navigation tech. So she was not some dummy, she was a person with skills. She was married to a fellow Navy man, though they don't tell us his rank or position. Best guess is she was attractive and was recruited for military special projects. Unfortunately, the military has no special projects other than these. This is what it does. She was not a stripper at the time of the Duke event.

At the time of the rape allegations, she was in her second year, studying police psychology, and earning a 3.0 average.[1]

Wow, did not know that. Did you? Not a stripper, but Navy studying to be a police woman. I guess we know how she skated all charges. Despite admitting all that on her page, the Wiki authors there then flip back in the next section to the claim she was a stripper:

In March 2006, Mangum was hired as an exotic dancer at a party organized by members of the Duke University men's lacrosse team. After arriving in an intoxicated state, having earlier consumed alcohol and cyclobenzaprine, to perform with another dancer at a house rented by three of the team captains, she became involved in an argument with the occupants of the residence and subsequently left.[11]

But wait, they just said she was a top student in police psychology and ex-Navy! Are we supposed to believe this top student was stripping for frat boys part time for tuition money? A better assumption would be the Navy was paying her tuition, wouldn't it?

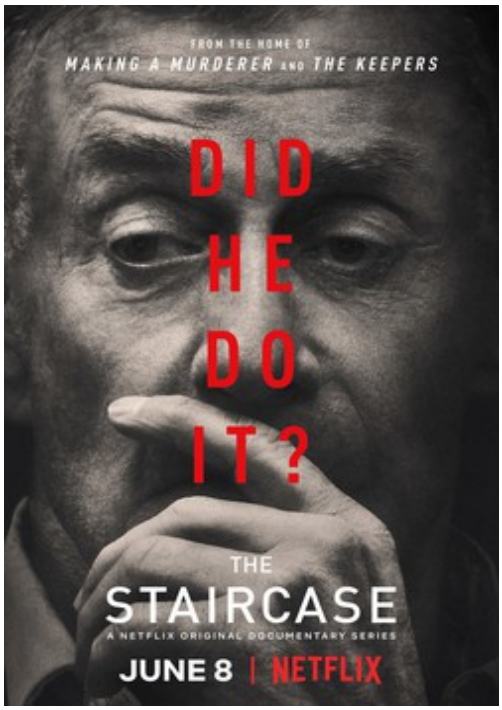

Anyway, in 2014 the State began reviewing all cases tried by Nifong and several were overturned. As just one example, Darryl Howard was given a new trial. His 1995 murder conviction was then vacated. So the State agreed with me so far that all of Nifong's previous cases should be put into question.

Which brings us back to the Peterson case. This was the 2001 case of the published writer accused of murdering his wife, by pushing her down a staircase. This, too, was all over the news, and you may remember it. Here is the main clue it was all fake, and the only one you should need:

Peterson's case attracted the attention of a French documentary team interested in American justice. Soon after his arrest, Peterson gave them access, including interviews with him and his family, the defense attorney, and others. The team had originally planned a film but, given the complexity of the material, expanded their work into a documentary miniseries The Staircase (2004), which aired on French TV.

The team started filming soon after Peterson's arrest in 2001, and followed the case through the trial and imprisonment. They continued filming through his appeal and Peterson's eventual Alford plea in 2017. After that they released a sequel to their first work that explored the following years.

Really? Is that how murder cases work? The murderer brings in a French film crew as soon as he is arrested, and they make a miniseries about it? [The miniseries was in English, by the way, and didn't just air in France. It also aired on ABC's Primetime Thursday in the US in 2004, for instance. It has been available on Netflix for many years, and was repackaged and repromoted in 2018.]

But there's more. The French guy who made the film was named Lestrade. No, seriously, though we aren't told if it is his real name. I assume not. If you don't remember, Lestrade is the name of the Scotland Yard detective that Sherlock Holmes often made look like a fool. So I see this as another instance of them tipping their hand to us and laughing that anyone buys this crap.

This Jean-Xavier de Lestrade specialized in English language documentaries of US murderers, pegging him as a hire of the CIA in my opinion, and he had already won an Oscar in 2001 for his film Murder on a Sunday Morning, about the Brenton Butler case in Florida. I may hit it another time but we can already see it was probably faked. But best guess is the case was cover for the female victim to go into CIA, or similar. A faked death is the perfect cover for that. Even the Oscar is a pointer back to CIA, since Hollywood is just a sub-agency of CIA and always has been. All the Oscars are minted in Langley, with their seal of approval.

Lestrade also made a film about the Courjault Affair, though for some reason it doesn't appear on his list at Wikipedia. Possibly it was too ridiculous to keep. Included on his list but also too absurd to keep is his latest, the 2023 Sambre—Anatomy of a Crime, a miniseries about fake serial rapist Dino Scala, who the French have been using to scare their women since 1988. I may hit it later as well, but we know it must be fake just from its connection to Lestrade.

On December 9, 2001, Peterson called police after allegedly finding his wife at the bottom of the stairs, dying in a pool of her own blood. Let that be your next clue, because death by falling down that staircase would not create such an incredible cascade of blood. We would only see something like that if this had been directed by Sam Peckinpah. If you died from such a fall, it would likely be from breaking your neck. To crack your skull with enough impact to create sprays of blood like that, you would have to run full speed down the hall and launch yourself headfirst down the stairs on purpose. So they really overdid it, like with Sharon Tate and many others we have looked at. They always do, since the gore is what sells the story and dims your reason. You forget to ask the first questions, and then all others.

Michael Peterson was President of his fraternity Sigma Nu at Duke, giving us that curious link, and got a law degree at UNC Chapel Hill. So he was well prepared for this fake trial, something they never tell you. He immediately went to work for the Department of Defense, working in Germany where he met his first wife Patricia. Wiki says she was working at the Rhein-Mann AFB as an elementary school teacher, but I found no confirmation of the teacher part, and assume it is false. More likely she was military intelligence. Most likely they both were, which blows the whole story by itself. They admit Michael was soon recruited out of the DoD by the Marines, where he became a captain and Military Police Officer in Japan. He later claimed to have a bronze star, a silver star, and two Purple Hearts, but he lied about the Purple Hearts since his injury was from a civilian car crash in Japan.

It is also very curious that Wikipedia refuses to give Patricia's maiden name:

> There he met and married Patricia Sue (Patty), a young American who taught at an elementary school on the Rhein-Main Air Base in Gräfenhausen, West Germany. They had two sons, Clayton and Todd.

Very strange wording, as you see, since they have to go way out of their way to avoid giving her last name, which was not yet Peterson when he met her. And it is not given anywhere on the page. So maybe it is Cohen. Also weird is that Michael allegedly became the guardian of two girls in Germany when their parents—who were friends of Michael—died. When he divorced Patricia and moved to the States, his two real children stayed with Patricia, while the girls came with him. Exceedingly odd.

Michael very soon met Kathleen Atwater, a very rich woman from a rich family (think Lee Atwater, for instance) who had also made a lot of her own money as an executive for Nortel, the huge Canadian Electric Company. I remind you that just a few years after this event, Nortel went under in one of the biggest bankruptcies ever, so the Peterson case may be tied to that. Nortel was probably already underwater in 2001 and Kathleen Peterson may have been involved, explaining why she might need to fake her death.

The bankruptcy case was the largest in Canadian history and left pensioners, shareholders, and former employees with enormous losses. By 2016, Nortel had sold billions of dollars in assets.[4] Courts in the US and Canada approved a negotiated settlement of bankruptcy proceedings in 2017.[5][6]

It left former employees with enormous losses . . . except those who had already cashed out a couple of years earlier, both on those pensions and on any life insurance policies.

During the trial, two more curious facts arose. One, it was found that Michael was gay, since many relationships surfaced. Two, it was discovered that the mother of the two girls Michael had taken in Germany had died in the same way: a fall down a staircase. Cue Twilight Zone music. Both these things tended to make him look guilty, for obvious reasons. Prosecutors speculated that maybe she was about to expose Michael as gay, or was mad at being scorned, and he had to get rid of her.

But before you jump to that conclusion, I remind you of two things: both facts are circumstantial and have no logical tie to the case, since being gay does not make you a murderer. And if the Petersons planned this to fake Kathleen's death, as I am telling you, they would naturally mirror this previous death to make Michael look guilty. It would be the coup de grace of the prosecution, although it was actually not evidence at all.

Since the whole event was fake, they had no real evidence, such as a murder weapon, a note, or anything else. No hard evidence was produced in court, as we will see, everything being circumstantial evidence like this. And there was also no evidence of foul play in Germany. Which, yes, could mean Michael was a genius at getting away with murder. But it could also mean Kathleen's death was faked. The fact that was never considered seems strange. It never is.

You will say it wasn't considered because they had a body, an ID, and an autopsy. But the ID was done by the family, who, if it was faked, were in on it. And an autopsy is worthless in that regard, since coroners are so easy to pay off, and these people were rich and connected. They lived in a huge mansion. We have seen it a thousand times. But they often don't even need to pay off a coroner, since the coroner doesn't know one body from another. He didn't know Kathleen personally, he is relying on an ID. If they switch bodies he doesn't know the difference.

Next you will say, "I can see why they would fake it, but why make Michael look guilty? Why not fake it as an accident? Insurance pays for accidents." Several possible answers there that no one has considered. One, the body they took from the morgue may not have been clean, meaning there was drugs and alcohol in the system, which might void a life insurance policy. The insurance people might argue this was suicide or that Kathleen was responsible for her own death, making it NOT an accident. Two, Kathleen and Michael may have at first planned the fake death together with the family, with Kathleen deciding at the last minute to implicate Michael, due to anger about the gay thing, or for some other reason. She may have switched the fake to a fall down the stairs, knowing of the previous incident in Germany. Three, Kathleen may have planned the whole thing herself, Michael knowing nothing of it. For now, I find this the least likely, since—like Russell Brand—he seemed to go out of his way to incriminate himself, even admitting guilt later in a pretend Alford Plea where he had to plead voluntary manslaughter. We will keep all possibilities on the table for now and see where the evidence leads us.

In pursuit of that, I continued to study the event in Germany. As it turns out, that lady was confirmed both before and after the event to have had von Willebrand's disease, had been suffering severe headaches, and had a severe hemorrhage before falling down the stairs. Which flips the entire script. Given that, the previous event is no longer indication Michael Peterson liked to push women down stairs, it is indication someone knew about this prior event and mirrored it on purpose in order to convict him. That is the conclusion Sherlock would reach. So the question remains: did both Michael and Kathleen fake her death, purposely making it a sequel to the previous one, or did Kathleen do it alone?

If all that wasn't weird enough, this case also includes an "Owl Theory". Go see it at Wikipedia if you don't believe me. Before we get into it, I remind you that, as cute and cuddly as owls are on Youtube, they are also an insignia of the CIA and a symbol of Lilith, consort of Satan. Intel uses them as a sign of covert operations, because they glide silently through the night.

In late 2003, a new theory of Kathleen's death was raised: that she had been attacked by a barred owl outside the house, had fallen after rushing inside, and had been knocked unconscious after hitting her head on the first tread of the stairs.[18] The owl theory was raised by Durham attorney T. Lawrence Pollard, a neighbor of the Petersons who was not involved in the case but had been following the public details. He approached the police suggesting an owl might have been responsible after viewing the autopsy photographs of Kathleen's head wounds.[19] Later, when reading the North Carolina State Bureau of Investigation (SBI) evidence list, he found a feather listed as found in Kathleen's hair (despite having previously been informed by the District Attorney's office that no feathers had been found during the investigation).[20] The SBI crime lab report listed a microscopic feather and a wooden sliver from a tree limb entangled in a clump of hair that had been pulled out by the roots found clutched in Kathleen's left hand.[21][22] A re-examination of the hair in September 2008 found another microscopic feather.[23]

Note the first footnote there: 18, aces and eights. But although this theory was obviously planted to sow confusion, it does tell us something about the coroner:

Deborah Radisch, the pathologist who conducted Kathleen's autopsy, says it was unlikely that an owl or any other bird could have made wounds as deep as those on her scalp. However, Radisch's opinion was challenged by other experts in three separate affidavits filed in 2010.[24]

That pegs Radisch as either a liar or an idiot, since big owls are strong enough to lift your scalp clean off. Their talons are much much stronger than your fingers, and they can put a claw all the way through your hand. To me it tends to confirm that Radisch was paid off by someone.

The next curious thing we find is that although the page for this event at Wikipedia is nearly endless, with a long section entitled “trial”, and although they admit the trial was the longest in the history of North Carolina, we aren't given any real evidence. Nothing the jury could have used to convict him. All the “arguments” of the prosecution are wild speculation based on nothing and shouldn't have even been allowed to stand. Defense should have objected to all of them and the judge should have struck them all from the case. This section is so thin they spend many paragraphs talking about a poke missing from the fireplace that may have been used to scratch Kathleen's skull, only to admit it was later found, with no blood or other evidence on it. Proving what I just said: a real judge would only allow a murder weapon to enter testimony if it could be produced. Speculating about missing pokes is just a waste of the court's time, and would not have happened in any real trial.

Which means, yes, I am saying the trial was as fake as the death, which means Kathleen must have had the help of CIA in faking her death. Even the Atwaters cannot totally manufacture court cases, but the CIA can. And why would they do Kathleen this great favor? I already told you: it played into their Men-are-Pigs script, since they could use it further scare women, demonize men, and split the sexes. Which is where I believe Michael's sexuality actually enters this case. He didn't give a flip for the heterosexual relationship or straight men, and he came out of the Marines, probably military intelligence, so he was fine with this project. Which again indicates he was involved from the beginning.

No information about Kathleen Atwater is available, but the Atwaters were also Russells at least back to the 1700s. She may be related to William Atwater, who was at the time the director of the Army Ordnance Museum in Maryland. He was a Marine and came of out of Duke, giving us two hits on the current event. He was about the same age as Michael Peterson, being born in 1945. They were both captains.

So let's look them up on the people searches.

I use that nose as a preview of what we know we will find here. FastpeopleSearch has Michael Peterson living in Reno, but with no previous address of Rocky Mount, where the Nash Correctional Institute supposedly housed him for eight years, from to 2003 to 2011. They have him in Reno already by 2003, which doesn't fit the trial timeline. How was he in court in NC all that time if he was living in Reno, NV? He has a PO box listed in Nashville, NC, starting in 2010, which could be Nash Correctional, but that should start in 2003, not 2010. There should be an address of the Institute, not just a PO box.

Peterson's father Eugene Iver Peterson was also military, retiring as a colonel in 1972. According to his page at Findagrave, he really did have the stars and the two Purple Hearts. He was an Elk and a Knight of Columbus. Eugene's mother was Della Mellander, daughter of Carl August of Goteburg, Sweden. They were related to Forbes, Underwood, Bennett, Dewitt, Moscoso, Schwartz and Rudd. They were Freemasons, as we find admitted at Findagrave on the page of John Mellander, her brother. Peterson's mother was Delpha Bartolino, and they descend from Teresa Procarione:

Teresa was born June 28, 1866 in Turin, Italy, the daughter of Gioanni Giacomo Procarione and Maria Cattarina Tarro-Genta.

Note the noble names there. This also links us to the names Battaglia and Capurro.

But the weirdest thing we find at FastPeopleSearch is Michael's dead wife Kathleen not only on his relatives list (she has been scrubbed from that at places like Instantcheckmate) but with her own page listed as still living with him in Reno in a $2 million home:

That's definitely her because she is the right age, is linked to Michael and her children, and has previous addresses in Durham. But the computer thinks she is still alive, since FastPeopleSearch lists dead people as “deceased”. They have many addresses for her after her death in 2001, including locations in Washington DC in 2008 and Washington, NC, in 2004. She is aka Kathleen Hunt, indicating that is either another family name or the name of a previous husband. In the relatives list we find her linked to Campbell, Clark, Chalfy, Greisman, Seibert, and Blaskowsky.

Also strange is that Michael has an address in Chicago in 1999, when he was supposed to be in Durham.

This case is in the can after that, so let's wrap it up. We have already seen that Michael Nifong, the assistant DA in this case, was later fired. So was Duane Deaver, the investigator in the case for the State Bureau of Investigation. As it turned out, not only was he fired, no one knew where he came from. Deaver claimed to have written 200 reports, testified in 60 cases, and been mentored at the agency by David Spittle, but Spittle testified that he could not recall mentoring Deaver, who, since completing a two-day training course in the 1980s, had testified in only four cases, the Peterson case being the third.

Can you say "CIA plant"? So what looks to me like happened is the CIA or some similar agency ran this event using their embedded agents, but lost control of it at some point, with the state and local boys finally outing them and pulling the plug. If any of this had been real, there is no way Peterson would ever be given a second trial, much less dodge that completely with a fake Alford Plea—that wasn't even an Alford Plea—and be freed for time served. The whole thing just dissolved in 2011, eight years into a life sentence without parole, with no legal explanation. But don't ask any questions please.

All this, especially Kathleen's current address in Reno with Michael, indicates to me they were in on it together. She didn't flip the script on him, his guilty verdict was always part of the script; but since the CIA was faking the trial for her as part of Men-are-Pigs, it didn't matter. They would fake his prison sentence as well, since they can do that, too, without batting an eyelash. Which explains why he was fine incriminating himself from the first, and even brought along his own film crew to catch him at it. So we could call this double or triple-scripted. Scripted first by Kathleen herself, using tasty bits like the staircase and the prior event in Germany; scripted second by her pals in the CIA, who wanted this for their Split-the-Sexes and Operation Chaos highlights reel; and third by the French agents creating their miniseries for the eternally gullible. Don't be a part of it.
